WALTON-LE-SOKEN, or WALTON-LE-NAZE, a par. in the hund. of Tendring, co. Essex, 18 miles E. of Colchester, its post town, and 7½ S. of Harwich, to which it is a subport. The village is situated on a cliff overhanging the sea. The S. cliffs adjoining the town have been defended from the encroachments of the sea by a wall. There are two hotels and numerous lodging houses. The crescent pier, which affords a promenade 300 feet in length by 14 in width, is used to land and embark passengers by steamers plying between here and Harwich. On that part called the Naze stands a tower built by the Trinity House as a sea-mark for vessels approaching Harwich from the S. Near Harwich is an inlet from the sea designated Walton Creek, or Backwater, abounding in wild fowl. The parish has been so encroached upon by the sea that ruins of houses have been discovered on a shoal called the West Rocks about 5 miles from the shore. The soil is fertile, consisting of loam, crag, and sand. Walton was formerly one of the three liberties called the Sokens. The shore abounds in pyrites, chiefly of wood, used for the manufacture of green copperas or sulphate of iron, and in nodules of argillaceous clay, which are collected and sent to Harwich and London for making Roman cement. In the clay at the basis of the cliffs have been discovered the tusks of elephants, horns, bones, and teeth of several huge extinct animals. The living is a vic., consolidated with that of Kirkby-le-Soken, in the dioc. of Rochester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was built by Bishop Porteous about 1804, and was enlarged in 1832, and again in 1835. The register dates from 1683. The old church and churchyard with many houses near it were swept away by the sea at the commencement of this century. The parochial charities produce about £81 per annum. There is a parochial school for both sexes. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have chapels. Walton Hall is the principal residence.

WALTON, LITTLE, a hmlt. in the par. of Monks Kirby, co. Warwick, 5 miles N. of Rugby, near the Midland Counties railway.

WALTON, LOW, a tnshp. in the par. of Walton, ward of Eskdale, co. Cumberland, 4 miles N. of Brampton.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, a par. in the first div. of Copthorne hund., co. Surrey, 4½ miles S.E. of Epsom, its post town, and 3 from Betchworth. It is a station on the London and South-Eastern railway. The village is situated between Epsom and Reigate, about a mile from the Brighton road through Sutton, and on the Roman way Stane Street. It was formerly a Roman station, where many relics of antiquity have been discovered. The surface is hilly, and comprises a considerable portion of open down and common, abounding in heath and various rare plants. There is a mineral spring. From the southern extremity of the parish a view is obtained of the Surrey hills and Sussex downs. The old manor house, called Walton Place, and which was once strongly fortified, is now a farmhouse. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £346. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was rebuilt in 1826. It has an old leaden font. The parochial charities produce about £13 per annum. There is a National school. C. H. Carew, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WALTON-ON-THE-HILL, a par. in the hund. of West Derby, co. Lancaster, 3 miles N.E. of Liverpool. It is a junction station on the Lancashire and Yorkshire railway. This par., comprising 24,650 acres, includes the tnshps. of Aintree, Bootle, Everton, Edgehill, Fazerkerly, Formby, Kirkby, Kirkdale, with its sessions house, Toxteth Park, West Derby, Stanley, and Simonswood, already mentioned under their several headings. In consequence of its proximity to the river Mersey and the Leeds canal, this place has recently vastly increased in population, forming an extensive suburban district to Liverpool, within which borough it is partly included.

WALTON-ON-THE-WOLDS, a par. in the hund. of East Goscote, co. Leicester, 4 miles E. of Loughborough, its post town, and 2 N.E. of Barrow-on-Soar railway station. The parish is bounded on the W. by a branch of the river Soar, and is situated near the Fosse Way and Midland Counties railway. The substratum is productive of limestone, which is quarried chiefly for agricultural purposes. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £409. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew or St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1739. The parochial charities produce about £1 per annum. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel.

WALTON SUPERIOR, a tnshp. in the par. of Runcorn, hund. of Bucklow, co. Chester, 2½ miles S.W. of Warrington, its post town. It is situated on the Bridgwater and Mersey and Irwell canals, near the river Mersey and the North-Western railway. The principal residence is the Hall. Sir R. Brooke, Bart., is lord of the two manors.

WALTON-UPON-THAMES, a par. in the first div. of Elmbridge hund., co. Surrey, 4 miles W. of Hampton Court, 3 N.W. of Esher, and 17 S.W. of London. It is a station on the South-Western railway. The village is situated on the banks of the Thames, near the bridge of 15 arches, the centre of which fell in 1859. It was at Coway Stakes ford, in this parish, that Cæsar crossed in pursuit of Cassibelaunus, and where stakes 16 feet in length, now petrified into iron hardness, were some years ago discovered, supposed to be those mentioned by Cæsar as driven in by the British chiefs to prevent the passage of the river. At St. George's Hill is Cæsar's Camp, of 14 acres, and in other parts of the parish are traces of Roman works. Walton Heath is a meet for the Surrey hounds. The par. includes the vil. of Hertham, a resort of anglers. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £209, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains many tombs of the members of the Rodney family, and a monument by Roubiliac to Richard Boyle, Viscount Shannon. There are also the district churches of Hertham and Oatlands, the livings of which are perpet. curs. The parish register dates from 1639. The parochial charities produce about £109 per annum. There are National schools for both sexes, and an infant school. The Wesleyans have a chapel. Oatlands, formerly a royal palace, and now occupied by the Oatlands Park Hotel and private residences, is partly in this and partly in the adjoining parish of Weybridge. Here are also the two mansions built by Cardinal Wolsey, Apps Court and Ashley Park, the former of which has been rebuilt; but the house said to have been the residence of President Bradshaw is now a farm. A fair for cattle, horses, and sheep is held on Wednesday and Thursday in Easter week.

WALTON-UPON-TRENT, a par. in the hund. of Repton, co. Derby, 4½ miles S.W. of Burton-upon-Trent, its post town, and 10 from Tamworth. It is a station on the Birmingham line of railway. The village is situated on the eastern bank of the river Trent, which here divides the co. of Derby from that of Stafford. The Grand Trunk canal and the Birmingham and Derby railway pass near this village. In 1833 an Act was obtained for building a bridge over the Trent at Barton-under-Needwood. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £828. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was thoroughly restored in 1827. The interior contains the brass of a priest. The parochial charities produce about £30 per annum, of which £21 go towards a school. Walton Hall is the principal residence. The Marquis Townshend is lord of the manor.

WALTON, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge Marsh-Land, co. Norfolk, 3 miles N.W. of Wisbeach, its post town. It is situated on the river Nene, which separates about 600 acres of this parish from the rest, forming part of the Isle of Ely. The village is situated near the Roman wall. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of St. David, val. £154. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. There is a National school for both sexes. The poor's land produces about £100 per annum.

WALTON, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Roose, co. Pembroke, 6 miles S.W. of Haverfordwest, and 4 from Milford. The village is situated near St. Bride's Bay. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £150.

WALTON, WOOD. See WOODWALTON, co. Hunts.

WALWICK, an ext.-par. lib. in N.W. div. of Tindale ward, co. Northumberland, 5 miles N.W. of Hexham. It is the site of the Roman Cilurnum, on the western bank of the North Tyne, near the line of the great wall built by Severus, and was the station of the Ala Secunda Asturum.

WALWINS CASTLE, a par. in the hund. of Roose, co. Pembroke, 6 miles S.W. of Haverfordwest, its post town, and 4 from Milford. The par. includes the hmlt. of Silver Hill, and has traces of Castell Gwalchmai tumulus. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £270. The church is dedicated to St. James.

WALWORTH, a populous suburb of the metropolis, in the par. of St. Mary, Newington, E. div. of Brixton hund., co. Surrey, 2 miles S. of St. Paul's Cathedral, London. It has a station at Walworth-road on the Metropolitan Extension of the London, Chatham, and Dover line. This place, which is mentioned in Domesday book as Walerode, consists of a continuous line of modern houses on the road to Camberwell with numerous streets extending on the W. to Kennington, and on the E. to the Kent-road. It is divided into the three ecclesiastical districts of St. John's, St. Paul's, and St. Peter's, respectively containing a population in 1861 of 7,426, 11,770, and 32,011. Adjoining the ancient manor-house were the Royal Surrey Zoological Gardens, comprising an area of about 16 acres, which were opened in 1832, when Exeter 'Change was removed from the Strand; there are also botanical gardens. The livings of the three district pars. are all perpet. curs. in the dioc. of London. The church of St. Peter was erected in 1825 by Soane, at a cost of £19,120, partly defrayed by the Parliamentary Commissioners. The churches of SS. John and Paul are also modern structures, as is the Beresford Chapel. There are twelve chapels belonging to Dissenting congregations, and numerous schools.

WALWORTH, a tnshp. in the par. of Heighington, S.E. div. of Darlington ward, co. Durham, 5 miles N.W. of Darlington. It is situated on the Roman way Watling Street, and is divided into the two hmlts. of High and Low Walworth. It was formerly the seat of the Nevilles, Hausands, and Jennisons. The principal residence is Walworth Castle, built by T. Jennison in Queen Elizabeth's reign. It is a meet for the Raby hounds.

WAMBROOK, a par. in the hund. of Beaminster-Forum, Bridport div. of co. Dorset, 2 miles S.W. of Chard, its post town, and 12 from Lyme Regis. The village is situated on the river Ketbridge, near the great western road from London, and is nearly surrounded by Somersetshire. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Sarum, val. £262. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and was anciently a chapel-of-ease to the vic. of Chardstock.

WAMPHRAY, a par. in the district of Annandale, co. Dumfries, Scotland. It extends in length about 6½ miles from N. to S., with an extreme breadth of 3½ miles, and is bounded by Moffat on the N., by Hutton and Corrie on the E., by Applegarth on the S., and on the W. by the river Annan, which separates it from Johnstone and Kirkpatrick-Juxta. The surface is hilly, abounding in sheep-walks, but near the river there is a considerable extent of good arable land. The prevailing rocks are graywacke and Old Red sandstone. The parish is traversed by the road from Glasgow to Carlisle and by the Caledonian railway, on which it has a station. The village of Wamphray is about 18 miles N.E. of Dumfries, and 58 from Edinburgh. It is situated on the Wamphray Water, which rises near Loch Fell, and flows 7 miles to the river Annan, forming in its course three cascades, respectively named the Pot, the Washing-pan, and Dab's Cauldron. In this parish are traces of a Roman road, also a Druidical circle, several camps and pillar-stones. This par. is in the presb. of Lochmaben and synod of Dumfries. The stipend of the minister is about £199. There are also an United Presbyterian church and a parochial school. The principal seats are Girthhead, Millhouses, and Stenries Hill.

WAMPOOL, a tnshp. in the par. of Aikton, ward and co. of Cumberland, 5 miles N.W. of Wigton, and 1 mile from Aikton. It is situated on the river Wampool, which rises near Serbergham Castle, and flows about 20 miles to Morecambe Bay, at Anthorn.

WANBOROUGH, a par. in the first div. of Woking hund., co. Surrey, 4 miles W. of Guildford. The village is situated under the ridge of hills called the Hog's Back, which intersect the parish. The soil is light, and a third part of the land is coppice or open common. There are several chalk-pits in this parish, which is tithe-free and exempt from ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The living is a cur. annexed to Puttenham. The old church, which belonged to the abbot of Waverley, now serves as a mausoleum for the Mangles family. There is a village school.

WANBOROUGH, a par. in the hund. of Kingsbridge, co. Wilts, 3 miles S.E. of Swindon, its post town, and 6 S.W. of Shrivenham railway station. It is situated about a mile from the Hungerford and Swindon road, on the Roman way to Cricklade and Winton. The par. is divided into Upper and Lower Wanborough, and includes the hmlts. of Hawpit and Nythe. Wanborough was formerly called Wodensbury. The manor came from the St. Amands, after the Conquest, to the Lovells. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £375, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parochial charities produce about £12 per annum. There is a National school for both sexes. The Wesleyans have a chapel. Ambrose Goddard, Esq., and the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, are lords of the manor.

WANDELL, an ancient par. in the upper ward of co. Lanark, Scotland, now joined to Lamingtoune.

WANDESLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Annesley, co. Notts; 8 miles N.W. of Nottingham, in Sherwood Forest, near Newstead Abbey.

WANDLE, a stream of co. Surrey, rises near Croydon, and joins the Thames at Wandsworth.

WANDSWORTH, a par., town, and suburban district of the metropolis, in the W. div. of Brixton hund., co. Surrey, 3¾ miles from Vauxhall Bridge, and 5½ S.W. of St. Paul's Cathedral. It has stations on the South-Western, London and Brighton, and London, Chatham, and Dover railways. It is situated on the road from London to Kingston, at the confluence of the river Wandle with the Thames, from which circumstance it derives its name. It is mentioned in Domesday book, and rose into importance on the settlement of the Dutch and French Protestants here in the reign of Louis XIV., the former of whom introduced the pin manufacture, and the latter that of hats. The par. has been divided into the two ecclesiastical livings of All Saints and St. Ann, and includes the hmlt. of Garrett, where the mock election of the Mayor of Garvatt, or Garrett, was formerly celebrated, and the ecclesiastical district of Summers Town. The population in 1861 was 13,346. The principal public buildings are the county court-house, recently erected in South-street; the county lunatic asylum, built in 1842; the bridge, rebuilt in 1757; the savings-bank; police-court of the V division; St. Peter's Hospital, or Fishmongers' almshouses, at East Hill, built in 1850, at a cost of £25,000; the Patriotic Asylum, for female orphans of soldiers, situated on the common, and the Boys' Home, in High-street, for the training of 100 destitute children. There are extensive paper-mills on the Wandle, built by Mr. M'Murray, three corn-mills, two distilleries, a brewery, scarlet dye, oil, white-lead, and vinegar works, hat factories, and a factory for bolting cloths—being the only one in the kingdom. The county court is held monthly, on the second Thursday in each month. The Poor-law Union comprises six parishes, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and V division of the metropolitan police. The livings of All Saints and St. Ann are both vics.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £360 and £800 respectively. The church of All Saints was rebuilt in 1780, with the exception of the tower, which is old. It contains a brass of 1420 and the tomb of Alderman Smith, or "Dog Smith," a great benefactor of the town. The church of St. Ann was built in 1825, at a cost of £14,600. There is also the district church of Summers Town, just completed, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £120. The register dates from 1603. There are chapels belonging to various denominations, a parochial library, National, Sunday, and other schools. The Society of Friends have a cemetery in this parish. The parochial charities produce about £500 per annum, including £170, the rent of the church estate. A fair was lately held on Whit-Monday and two following days for the sale of cattle and horses.

WANGFORD, a hund. in co. Suffolk, contains the pars. of Bursham, Beccles, Bungay Holy Trinity and St. Mary, North Cove, Ellough, South Elmham All Saints, South Elmham St. Cross, South Elmham St. James, South Elmham St. Margaret, South Elmham St. Michael, South Elmham St. Nicholas, South Elmham St. Peter, Flixton, Homersfield, Ilketshall St. Andrew, Ilketshall St. John, Ilketshall St. Margaret, Ilketshall St. Lawrence, Mettingham, Redisham, Ringsfield, Shadingfield, Shipmeadow, Sotterley, Weston, Willingham, Worlingham, and part of Henstead; comprising an area of 35,540 acres.

WANGFORD, a par. and post town in the hund. of Blything, co. Suffolk, 4 miles N.W. of Southwold, and 5½ N.E. of Halesworth. The village is situated on a branch of the river Blythe, on the road from London to Yarmouth. The par. includes the hmlt. of Henham. Here was formerly a Cluniac priory, a cell to Thetford, founded by Doudo Asini, or by Eudo Dapifer, in the middle of the 12th century, and which at the suppression had a revenue valued at £30 9*s.* 5*d.* Traces of the buildings are still to be seen on the S. side of the church. The principal residence is Henham Hall. The living is a perpet. cur. with that of Henham annexed, in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £79. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains some monuments of the Stradbroke family. The register dates from 1660. The parochial charities produce about £5 per annum. There are National and day schools for both sexes, and a Sunday-school. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. The Earl of Stradbroke is lord of the manor.

WANGFORD, a par. in the hund. of Lackford, co. Suffolk, 2½ miles S.W. of Brandon Ferry, its post town, and 7 N.E. of Mildenhall. The parish is traversed by the road from London to Lynn, by way of Mildenhall. The land is partly in rabbit-warrens. The living is a rect. annexed to that of Brandon, in the dioc. of Ely. The church is dedicated to St. Denis. The principal residence is Wangford Hall.

WANLIP, a par. in the hund. of West Goscote, co. Leicester, 4½ miles N. of Leicester, its post town, 3 S.E. of Mountsorrel, and 1½ mile from the Syston railway station. The village is situated on the river Soar, here crossed by a bridge, and forming part of the Melton-Mowbray navigation. The Roman Fosse Way passed through the parish, near which pavements, urns, and other antiquities have been discovered. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £336. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was built in the reign of Richard II. The interior contains a brass to Sir T. Walsh. The parochial charities produce about £5 per annum. There is a National school, erected by Lady Palmer in 1839. Sir G. J. Palmer, Bart., is lord of the manor.

WANLOCKHEAD, a town in the par. of Sanquhar, district of Nithsdale, co. Dumfries, Scotland, 8½ miles N.E. of Sanquhar, and 1¼ mile S. of Leadhills. It is situated at the head of the river Wanlock, on a hill rising 1,380 feet above sea-level. It contains several lead-mines, belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch, which annually yield about 9,200 bars of lead, and 4,500 of silver. Several minerals, as rock cork, blue copper ore, calamine, and nickel ochre, with many spars, are found. A new church has been recently built by the Duke of Buccleuch, in lieu of the chapel erected in 1755. There are Free churches at Wanlockhead and Leadhills. The miners have the use of a library.

WANNERTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Kidderminster-Foreign, co. Worcester, adjoining Kidderminster.

The village is situated on the great N. road from London to York, at the 13-arched bridge over the river Nene, which separates this parish from that of Stibbington, in the county of Huntingdon. It was formerly a chapelry to Thornhaugh. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the rect. of Thornhaugh, in the dioc. of Peterborough. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a village school with a small endowment.

WANSFORD, a tnshp. in the par. of Nafferton, wap. of Dickering, East Riding co. York, 3 miles S.E. of Great Driffield, its post town. The village is situated on the navigable river Hull. It contains a carpet factory and extensive flour and bone mills. There is a school for both sexes, at which a Sunday-school is held. The Wesleyans have a chapel.

WANSTEAD, a par. and post town in the hund. of Becontree, co. Essex, 7 miles N.E. from Shoreditch, and 1½ mile from Ilford station on the Great Eastern railway. It is situated on the river Roding, near the Great Eastern railway and Epping Forest. The village, which has doubled in population during the last quarter of a century, contains the station of the K division of the metropolitan police. The parish includes the hmlt. of Snaresbrook, close to the borders of the forest. Wanstead was given by Edward the Confessor to St. Paul's Cathedral, and is mentioned in Domesday book as being held at that time by Ralph Fitz-Brien, from whom it passed to the Herons and Lord Rich, whose son sold it to Robert, Earl of Leicester, in 1577; it afterwards passed to the Mildmays and Childs, Earls of Tylney, by whom Wanstead House was built in 1715. This mansion, having come by marriage to the Hon. W. P. T. L. Wellesley, it was sold and demolished in 1822, with the exception of the stables and out-offices. At a short distance from Snaresbrook Pond stands the Infant Orphan Asylum, the foundation-stone of which was laid by the late Prince Consort, in 1841. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of London, val. £616. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1790. The interior contains an E. window by Eginton, and a monument to Sir Josiah Child, Bart. A chapel-of-ease was erected in 1861. The parochial charities produce about £86 per annum, of which £20 go to Bowles's school. In place of the almshouses at Potter's Field and Old Street Road, the Weavers' Company have erected others at New Wanstead. There are an infant school and a National school for both sexes. Many relics of antiquity, including tesselated pavements, urns, Roman coins, &c., were discovered near here in the years 1724 and 1746.

WANSTROW, a par. in the hund. of Frome, co. Somerset, 6 miles S.W. of Frome, its post town, and a quarter of a mile from the Wanstrow railway station. There is a National school for both sexes, at which a Sunday-school is held, and the Wesleyans have a chapel. Mrs. C. S. Clarke is lady of the manor.

WANTAGE, a hund. in co. Berks, contains the pars. of Ardington, Childrey, East Garston, East and West Hundred, East Lockinge, Wantage, and parts of Denchworth, West Hanney, and Sparsholt; comprising an area of 28,160 acres.

WANTAGE, a par. and ancient market town in the above hund., co. Berks, 22 miles N.W. of Reading, and 60 W. of London. Wantage Road is a station on the Great Western railway. It is situated near the Vale of the White Horse, on the Wilts and Berks canal, and a branch of the river Ock. The par. includes the hmlts. of Charlton, Grove, and West Lockinge. Alfred the Great is said to have been born here. After the Conquest it was held by Roger Bigod, who gave it to the noble family of Fitzwarrens, who held it for a considerable period, and obtained for it a grant of a market from Henry III. In 1849 a millenary festival was held here in commemoration of the birth of King Alfred, when funds were subscribed for the rebuilding of the grammar-school, and a medal was struck in honour of the jubilee. The town is governed by a board of commissioners appointed under an Act of Parliament in 1828. Petty sessions are held fortnightly on Wednesday. A county court is also held monthly, and the Poor-law guardians sit weekly on Tuesday at the union workhouse, which is situated nearly 1½ mile from the town. The union comprises 34 parishes or townships. The population of the parish in 1861 was 3,925, and of the town, 3,064. The chief trade is in corn, malt, and other agricultural produce, the manufacture of sacking, twine, and hempen goods having declined; there is also a brass and iron foundry, known by the name of the Vale of White Horse Foundry. There are a savings-bank, a branch of the London and County bank, and a reading room. The soil of the surrounding district is particularly adapted to the growth of wheat. An annual meeting for coursing, called the "Letcombe Bowers' Meeting," is held on the downs. The living is a vic.,* with the chapelry of Charlton annexed, in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £503, in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, contains 18 carved stalls with miserere seats, a wooden screen, and two brasses—one of a priest and the other of a knight, both Fitzwarrens—besides other monuments of the Fitzwarren and Wilmot families, and double piscina and old altar stone. There is also the district church of Grove, the living of which is a perpet. cur.,* val. £83. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. The parochial charities produce about £650 per annum, of which £450 are from the town lands. Roman coins and a bath have been found in the vicinity, and near the Ridge way leading over the downs, is a large tumulus called the "Wayland Smith," supposed to be of Druidical origin. Butler, Bishop of Durham, was born here in 1692. Market-days are Wednesday and Saturday, the former for corn and the latter for meat and provisions. Fairs are held on the first Saturdays in March and May for cattle and cheese, 18th July for cherries, and 17th and 18th October for pleasure and hiring servants.

WAPPENHAM, a par. in the hund. of King's-Sutton, co. Northampton, 5 miles S.W. of Towcester, its post town, and 7 from Brackley. The village is situated on the river Tove. The par. includes the hmlts. of Astwell and Falcatt, near the former of which is an ancient mansion once the seat of the earls Ferrars. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £354, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has two brasses bearing date from 1481. The parochial charities produce about £30 per annum. There are National schools, and the Wesleyans have a chapel. Lord Southampton is lord of the manor.

WAPPING, a par. and metropolitan district in the Tower div. of Ossulstone hund., co. Middlesex, 2 miles S.E. of St. Paul's, London. It is a suburb of East London, situated on the river Thames, by which it was overflowed till Elizabeth's reign, when a river wall was constructed. The land subsequently became meadow ground, called Wapping Wash, and formed part of Stepney parish till about 1695. The parish comprises about 38 acres, inclusive of the main entrance to the London Docks, constructed between the years 1802 and 1805. The population in 1861 amounted to 4,038. At this place Judge Jeffries was apprehended in 1688 in a sailor's disguise; and here lived Day, the block-maker, who first established Fairlop Fair by dining with his friends under the oak. The station of the K division of the Metropolitan police is situated here, as also the Thames police vessel for the Thames D division. A portion of the parish is within the precincts of Well-close, in the liberty of the Tower. It consists of several streets paved and lighted with gas, and the main street has been widened in several places during the present reign. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of London, val. £258, in the patron. of Brazenose College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. In the interior is a monument by Roubiliac. The parochial charities produce about £634 per annum. There are a Free school, of which Thomas Dillworth, the author of the "Spelling Book," was once master. There are Roman Catholic schools, and a school maintained by the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. There are chapels for Roman Catholics and Dissenters.

WARBLETON, a par. in the hund. of Hawkesborough, rape of Hastings, co. Sussex, 3 miles S. of Heathfield, 10 W. of Battle, and 12 S.E. of Uckfield. Hurst Green is its post town. The village is situated on the river Cuckmere. The land is partly in hop-grounds and orchards. Sandstone and iron ore are abundant, the latter having been once worked. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £663. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a brass of Prior Prestwick, of Hastings, bearing date 1436. The register dates from 1558. The parochial charities produce about £45 per annum. There is a parochial school for both sexes. The ruins of an ancient priory are to be seen at Rushlake Green, erected in 1413 by Sir John Pelham. The principal residences are Markly and Stone House, the latter the seat of the Roberts family. The Earls of Ashburnham and Chichester are lords of the manor.

WARBLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Bosmere, co. Hants, three quarters of a mile S.E. of Havant, its railway station and post town. The village is situated on Langston Harbour, opposite Hayling Island, and comprises the chplries. of Emsworth, and part of Red Hill. Warblington came from a family of that name in Henry III.'s time to Ralph de Monthermer, and subsequently to the Montacutes and Cottons, whose mansion, Warblington Castle, is now in ruins, the gateway and tower alone remaining. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £550. The church is of the early part of the 13th century, and has two oratories. Stone coffins from 5½ to 7 feet in length have been found here. The register dates from 1660. There are also the district churches of Emsworth and Red Hill, the livings of which are perpet. curs.

WARBORNE, a tythg. in the par. of Boldre, co. Hants, 2 miles N. of Lymington. It is joined with Pilley.

WARBOROUGH, a par. in the hund. of Ewelme, co. Oxford, 3 miles N. of Wallingford, its post town. The village is situated between the rivers Thames and Thame. The par. includes the hmlt. of Shillingford. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £350, in the patron. of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Laurence. The parochial charities produce about £5 per annum. The President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford, are lords of the manor.

WARBOYS, a par. in the hund. of Hurstingstone, co. Huntingdon, 7 miles N.E. of Huntingdon, its post town, and 4 S.E. of Ramsey. Warboys, formerly spelt Wardeboys, was held by the Hallidays in the 13th century under David of Scotland. A portion of the land is in wood. The soil in the high lands is clay, and in the low grounds fen. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £1,250. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains the brass of a priest, two tombs of the Lemans by Bacon, and some old stained glass. The living was once held by Archdeacon Johnson, chaplain to Charles II. The parochial charities produce about £36 per annum. There are National and infant schools. The Particular Baptists and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. The Rev. H. C. Jones is lord of the manor.

WARBRICK, a tnshp. in the par. of Bispham, hund. of Amounderness, co. Lancaster, 2½ miles S.W. of Poulton-le-Fylde. It is situated on the coast, and includes the village of Blackpool. It is joined with Layton.

WARBSTOW, a par. in the hund. of Lesnewth, co. Cornwall, 8 miles N.E. of Camelford. The surface is hilly and the soil light. The living is a vic. annexed to that of Treneglos, in the dioc. of Exeter. The church, dedicated to St. Werburgh, contains a curious Norman font. There is a National school. The Wesleyans and Bible Christians have each a chapel. In this parish is an ancient fortification called Warbstow Barrow.

WARBURTON, a par. in the hund. of Bucklow, co. Chester, 7 miles N.E. of Warrington, its post town, 2½ from Lymm, and about 1 mile from the Warburton station on the Warrington and Stockport line of railway. The village, which was formerly a market town, is situated on the river Mersey. Prior to the reign of Henry II. there was founded here a Premonstratensian priory as a cell to Cockersand Abbey. In the parish is an extensive flour mill, worked by the river Bollin, which passes through this parish, and separates it from Lymm. The surface is flat, and the chief produce cheese and potatoes. The soil is a sandy loam, with a subsoil of stiff clay and sandstone rock. Remains of the market cross still exist. The living is a perpet. cur.,* annexed to the second mediety of the rect. of Lymm, in the dioc. of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Werburgh, contains brasses of the 17th century. The parochial charities produce about £3 per annum. There are National and Sunday-schools for both sexes, supported by the Rev. D. A. Beaufort, M.A. R. E. Warburton, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WARCOP, a par. in East ward, co. Westmoreland, 2½ miles N.W. of Brough, and 5 S.E. of Appleby. It is a station on the Eden Valley branch of the North-Eastern railway. The village is situated on the river Eden, at the confluence of the Harbour and Flitholme Becks. The par. contains the tnshps. of Warcop and Bleatarn, and is bounded on the N. by the lofty ridge of mountains which extends from Stainmore to the borders of Scotland. The manor of Warcop was anciently held by a family of that name, the ruins of whose seat at Castle Hill supplied the materials for the steeple of the parish church of Kirkby Stephen. The manor subsequently passed to the Brathwaites and Stephensons. The ancient cross, recently brought from the neighbouring common, now occupies the site of a maypole in the village. The land is chiefly in pasture, a large portion being mountainous. The soil in parts is light and sandy, and in others mixed with red and blue clay. There are quarries of red freestone and some lead mines. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £194. The church is dedicated to St. Columba. The chancel has recently been rebuilt by the lord of the manor, and some stained windows inserted.

The Wesleyans and Wesleyan Association Methodists have each a chapel. Warcop Tower is now a farm. Warcop House, Warcop Hall, Eden Gate, and Toddygill, are the principal residences. The Rev. W. Stephenson Preston, B.A., is lord of the manor. An ancient custom called rush-bearing is still celebrated by the villagers on St. Peter's day. An extensive fair is held at Brough Hill on the last day in September and first day in October, for the sale of cattle, horses, sheep, &c.

WARD, a par. in the bar. of Castleknock, co. Dublin, Ireland, 4½ miles N.W. of Finglass. The village is situated on the small river Ward, which flows in an eastward direction to the Broadmeadow at Swords. Stone is quarried. There is a police station, at which petty sessions are held. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Dublin, united with Finglass. The church has long since fallen to decay.

WARD, a vil. in the par. of Cruden, co. Aberdeen, Scotland, 5 miles S.W. of Peterhead. Its site is adjacent to Slains Castle. It has a good harbour with excellent accommodation for the vessels which import lime and coal.

WARDEN, a par. in the lib. of the Isle of Sheppey, lathe of Scray, co. Kent, 7 miles E. from Queenborough, its post town, and the same distance from Faversham. It is situated opposite the Nore, near Warden Point, where the cliffs rise to a great altitude. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £70. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an ancient edifice, the tower of which was restored in 1834 by D. Banks, Esq., with part of the materials of old London Bridge. J. Ward, Esq., of Sheerness, is lord of the manor.

WARDEN, CHIPPING. See CHIPPING WARDEN, co. Northampton.

WARD-END, a hmlt. and chplry. in the par. of Aston, co. Warwick, 3 miles S.E. of Birmingham. The living is a perpet. cur. in the patron. of the Vicar of Aston. The church has been restored.

WARDEN LAW, a tnshp. in the par. of Houghton-le-Spring, N. div. of Easington ward, co. Durham, 2 miles E. of Houghton-le-Spring, and 7 N.E. of Durham. It is situated on an eminence near the Hetton colliery and railway.

WARDEN NETHER, a par. in the N.W. div. of Tindale ward, co. Northumberland, 2½ miles N.W. of Hexham. This parish is situated between the Roman wall of Severus and the North and South Tyne rivers, which form a junction at the eastern extremity of the parish, here traversed by the line of the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. The soil in the valleys is of a sandy nature, and on the ridges of the hills it is various, resting principally on freestone. Lime and coal are worked, and there is a paper mill. The living is a vic.,* with that of Newbrough annexed, in the dioc. of Durham, joint val. £510. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was rebuilt about 1805. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Haydon Bridge. The local charities produce above £1,000 a year, principally the endowment of Haydon Bridge Grammar school and almshouses. On an eminence called Castle Hill are vestiges of a circular British fortification, afterwards occupied by the Romans as a camp, where hand corn mills, and other antiquities have been found.

WARDEN, OLD, a par. in the hund. of Wixamtree, co. Bedford, 3 miles S.W. of Biggleswade, its post town, and 8 S.E. of Bedford. The village was formerly a market town, and had a fair granted in 1218. An abbey for Cistercian monks from Rievaulx was founded in 1135 by Walter l'Espec, the revenue of which, at the Dissolution, was valued at £390, when the site was given to the Whitbreads. At Warden Hills is a meet for Mr. Brand's hounds. In the vicinity is the ruin of Warden Abbey. The living is a vic.,* annexed to that of Southill, in the dioc. of Ely. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, has been restored at the expense of the present Lord Ongley. In the churchyard is the mausoleum of the Ongley family. There are Sunday and infant schools. WARDY-HILL, a hmlt. in the par. of Coveney, co. Cambridge, 5 miles N.W. of Ely.

WARE, a par., post, and market town in the hund. of Braughin, co. Herts, 2 miles N.E. of Hertford, and 21 N. of London by road, or 24½ by the Hertford branch of the Great Eastern railway, on which it is a station. It is situated on the ancient Ermine Street and the rivers Ash and Lea, the latter being here crossed by an iron bridge constructed in 1845, and only half a mile from the New River head, which rises amongst the gravel hills. The management of the navigation of the river Lea is vested in trustees, appointed under several Acts of parliament, the last of which was obtained in 1850—the expense of the improvements being defrayed by tolls. It appears to have been a place of importance in the Saxon times, and is the place where King Alfred is said to have taken the Danish fleet, in 894, by turning the course of the river. It is called in Domesday book Waras, and was then held by Hugh de Grentemaisnil, who founded here a Benedictine cell to Uticain Abbey, in Normandy, which at the Dissolution came with Shene priory to Trinity College, Cambridge. The manor was subsequently held by several illustrious families, Robert de Blanchmain, the Earls of Winchester, Wake, Montacute, Neville, Plantagenet, the Fair Maid of Kent, mother of Richard II., Lady Margaret, mother of Henry VII., to whom it was granted after the battle of Bosworth Field. The Fanshaws obtained it in the reign of Elizabeth, of which family the last was Sir R. Fanshaw, the ambassador in Spain and husband of Lady Fanshaw, author of the memoirs. A grand tournament was held here in 1242, at which the Earl of Pembroke was trampled to death. The par. includes the hmlts. of Ware Side and Amwell End—the latter situated on the S. bank of the river Lea. The population of the parish in 1861 was 5,397, and of the town 5,002. The town is lighted with gas and well supplied with water. It contains a town-hall, market-house, and assembly rooms, built on arches in 1827, union poorhouse, a branch of the London and County Joint-Stock Bank, an institute, library and reading-room, and above 70 malting-houses, returning a greater amount to the inland revenue on that article than any other town in the kingdom. There are also considerable operations in brewing, rope, sacking, and brick-making. The town is governed by a board of health. The county magistrates hold petty sessions fortnightly on Tuesday at the townhall, and the board of guardians meet weekly on Tuesday. The Poor-law Union comprises 14 parishes. It is also the seat of a superintendent registry, but is included in the Hertford New County Court district. The principal seats in the vicinity are Ware Priory, with traces of the old priory, and Ware Park, which last was rebuilt by Alderman Byde, a London brewer, who obtained the manor by purchase from the Fanshaw family, and afterwards by W. Parker, Esq., the present owner. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £333, in the patron. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is of the reigns of Edward III., Richard II., and Henry VII., and has recently been restored at a cost of £5,810. The interior contains some stained glass, an antique font, and some brasses, including one to Ellen Cook, bearing date 1450. There are also the district churches of Christ Church and Holy Trinity Ware Side, the livings of which are perpet. curs., val. £150 and £100 each. Christ Church was built and endowed by Robert Hanbury, Esq., in 1858. In the High Street is a congregational church, built in 1859. There are chapels for Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists, also a free grammar school, British and foreign, National and infant schools, and a school founded by the widow of the late Edward Chuck, Esq. The parochial charities produce about £410 per annum. A Roman coin of the Emperor Constantine and several stone coffins were discovered in 1802 in Bury Field. At the "Saracen's Head" is exhibited the "great bed of Ware"—a carved oak bedstead 12 feet square. Market day is on Tuesday. Fairs are held on the last Tuesday in April and the Tuesday before the 21st of September.

WAREHAM, a post and market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, in the hund. of Winfrith, co. Dorset, 4 miles N.W. of Corfe Castle, and 15 S.E. of Dorchester. It is a station on the Dorchester railway. This place is situated on a branch of the ancient Icknield Street, at the extremity of a peninsula formed by the rivers Piddle and Frome, the estuary of which streams forms Wareham Harbour, inside Poole Harbour. The quay, which lies on the S. side of the town, was long dilapidated, but has recently been restored, and is chiefly used for the export of plastic and pipe clay, which are brought from the pits by a short line of railway, and shipped at the quay for the potteries in Staffordshire. The tides are felt as high as Holme Bridge, 3 miles above the town, which now covers a quadrangular area of about 100 acres, nearly inclosed by high ramparts of earth, said to have been originally formed by the Britons, and subsequently surmounted with walls by the Romans, whose stations, Morinio and Stoborough were within the limits of the present borough. In the Saxon times it was called Waerham, and had a fort destroyed in 875. King Athelstane made it a mint town, and Edward the Martyr, who was murdered at Corfe Castle by Elfrida, was first buried in the S. aisle of St. Mary's Church, but after three years his remains were removed to Shaftesbury. It suffered much from the Danes in the 10th century, and in 1015 was ravaged by Canute. It is mentioned in Domesday Survey as belonging to the crown, and then contained 125 houses with 8 churches, 3 of which are alone remaining. After the Conquest the manor was given to Robert de Bellomonte, who rebuilt the castle, which being garrisoned for the Empress Maud, was taken by Stephen, who burnt the town. In 1205 it was visited by King John, who landed here from France, and in the reign of Edward III. it supplied three ships to the siege of Calais. At the commencement of the civil war of Charles I. it was garrisoned for the parliament, but was taken by the royalists in 1644, when the town was much damaged, as it was again in 1762 by an accidental fire. —By the passing of the Reform Act in 1832 it was deprived of one of its members, having previously returned two members to parliament from the time of Edward I., and its boundaries were then extended so as to include besides the three town parishes of the Holy Trinity (including Stoborough Liberty, Middlebere, Ridge, and Redcliffe) St. Mary Within and Without, St. Martin Within and Without, the adjoining parishes of Corfe Castle, Arne, Bere Regis, and parts of East Stoke and Morden. The population of the parliamentary borough in 1851 was 7,218, and in 1861, 6,694, inhabiting 1,339 houses. Wareham is not under the Municipal Corporations Act, but is a borough by prescription, governed under a charter of Queen Ann, by a mayor, recorder, 6 capital and 12 assistant burgesses. The borough sessions are held annually before the mayor and recorder, also a court of record before the mayor on the first Monday in each month. A court-leet is held annually at which the borough constables and other officers are appointed. Wareham is the head of New County Court and Superintendent registry districts, and of a Poor-law Union embracing 24 parishes; it is also a polling place for the county elections. The manor, which once belonged to Robert de Bellomonte, the Clares, Mortimers, Queens of Henry VIII., Plunkets, and Erles, is now the property of J. Hales Calcraft, Esq., of Rempstone, with whom is the chief influence in the borough. The town consists mainly of four streets, intersecting each other at right angles, and skirted by gardens occupying the unedificed space within the ancient enclosure. There are a townhall and gaol, union poorhouse, barracks, savings-bank, two commercial banks, reading room, and library in connection with the mutual improvement society; also two bridges—that across the Frome, connecting the northern part of the county with the Isle of Purbeck, was rebuilt in 1779, to replace one of the time of William Rufus, the other across the Piddle. —The principal trade is in agricultural produce and potters' clay; there were until lately some persons employed in shirt-button making, straw plait, and stocking knitting, but machinery has superseded them. The salmon fishery has been nearly destroyed by the system of taking the fish out of season. There are but slight traces of the castle where Robert de Belême died a prisoner, but the nunnery founded at the commencement of the 8th century by Bishop Adhelm, and which was subsequently made a Benedictine cell to Lira Abbey by the Bellomonts, is still standing, belongs to the Earl of Eldon, and is the residence of the family of Thomas Phippard, Esq. Chapman, the tutor of Lord Camden, was born here in 1704; and Horace Walpole in 1717. The living consists of the recta.* of St. Martin and St. Mary, with the perpet. cur. of St. Mary, in the dioc. of Sarum, joint val. £400, the church of our Lady St. Mary is said to be the burial-place of the early Saxon kings, and contains effigies and tombs of the Calcrafts, and of Hutchins, the county historian. The nave was rebuilt in 1842. Near the W. entrance is a font of lead, of the 11th century, with figures of the 12 apostles in alto-relievo, and in the chancel is a window of the date of Henry VII. The churches of Holy Trinity and St. Martin are no longer used for divine worship, the former having been converted into the schoolhouse, and the latter used as a mortuary chapel. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians have each a chapel. There are an endowed school, founded by G. Pitt in 1693, and almshouses for 11 poor persons, founded by J. Stretch, but rebuilt in 1741. The local charities produce about £270 per annum. Market day is on Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 17th April and 11th September for cattle, 8th September for sheep, besides five cattle markets fortnightly, commencing about 14th February.

WARHAM, a vil. in the hund. of North Greenhoe, co. Norfolk, 2 miles S.E. of Wells, its post town, and 3 N. of Walsingham. It consists of the two adjoining pars. of All Saints and St. Mary, situated on the river Stiffkey and bounded on the N. by the German Ocean. Here was a moated seat of the Ffolkes family, and on the banks of the Stiffkey are the remains of a trebled ditched round camp of 9 acres, with two barrows in Sweno meadow, supposed to have been thrown up by the Danes. The two parishes were consolidated in 1795 for all except ecclesiastical matters. The living is a rect., with that of St. Mary annexed, in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £500. There are two churches, one dedicated to All Saints and the other to St. Mary, besides traces of a third parish church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The register dates from 1663. There are parochial schools for both sexes. The Earl of Leicester is lord of the manors of Warham Ducas and Warham Hales.

WARINGTOWN, a vil. in the par. of Donaghcloney, co. Down, Ireland, 5 miles S.W. of Moira. It was formerly called Clanconnel, and is situated near the river Lagan. There is a police station where petty sessions are held.

WARK, a par. in the N.W. div. of Tindale ward., co. Northumberland, 11 miles N.W. of Hexham, its post town. It is a station on the Border Counties branch of the North British railway, and is 7 miles N.W. of the Four Stones station on the Newcastle and Carlisle railway. It is situated on the Wark Burn, which falls into the river North Tyne at the Ferry. The par. includes the tnshps. of High Shitlington, Wark, and Warksburn. Wark belonged to the crown up to James I.'s time, and was forfeited in 1715 by the Ratcliffes. It formed part of Simonburn parish till 1814. The village, which is old, has been much improved by the erection of a row of houses built with the stone taken from some extensive ruins. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £240, in the patron. of the Governors of Greenwich Hospital. The church was erected in 1815—18. The parochial charities consist of a share with Simonburn. There is a grammar school for both sexes. The Presbyterians and Wesleyans have each a chapel. There are ruins of a chureh near Kirkful. The Duke of Northumberland is lord of the manor.

WARK, a tnshp. in the par. of Carham, co. Northumberland, 2 miles from Coldstream, and 2½ E. of Carham, by the Kelso and Tweedmouth branch of the North-Eastern railway, which has a station here. It is a small fishing village on the Tweed, across which is a ferry to Coldstream. There are traces of a border castle on a steep rock overlooking the Tweed; it was taken by the Scots on several occasions, but was ineffectually besieged in 1533.

WARKLEIGH, a par. in the hund. of South Molton, co. Devon, 5 miles S.W. from Southmolton, its post town, and 4½ from Umberleigh railway station on the Taw Vale line. The village is situated between the rivers Taw and Mole. The soil is of various qualities, with a subsoil of clay. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £215. The church is dedicated to St. John. The chancel was re-erected in 1850. The parochial charities produce about £2 per annum, which go to the National school for both sexes. The trustees of the late Lord Rolle are lords of the manor.

WARKSBURN, a tnshp. in the par. of Wark, in the N. div. of Tindale ward, co. Northumberland, 2½ miles N.W. of Wark. It consists of numerous scattered farms on either side of the Wark rivulet.

WARKTON, a par. in the hund. of Huxloe, co. Northampton, 1½ mile N.E. of Kettering, its post town, and 74 miles from London. The soil consists chiefly of clay upon a substratum of limestone. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £293. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, contains effigies and monuments of the Montagues of Boughton, several of which are by Roubiliac and Vaugelder. The parochial charities produce about £9 per annum. There is an infant school, supported by the Duchess of Buccleuch. The Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor.

WARKWORTH, a par. in the hund. of King's-Sutton, co. Northampton, 2 miles E. of Banbury, its post town. It is situated on the river Cherwell, which separates this parish from that of Banbury, in Oxfordshire. The living is a cur. annexed to the vic. of Marston St. Lawrence, in the dioc. of Peterborough. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has been thoroughly restored, and the interior contains several monuments and three brasses of the Chetwode family, bearing date from 1412. There is a village school. J. Smith, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WARKWORTH, a par., seaport, and market town, partly in the E. div. of Morpeth ward, and partly in Coquetdale ward, co. Northumberland, 3½ miles N.E. of Acklington, and 7½ S.E. of Alnwick. It is a station on the North-Eastern line of railway. The village is situated at a short distance westward from the sea-coast, near the mouth of the river Coquet, which is here crossed by an old bridge. It consists of one long street, extending from the bridge to the castle. The par. contains Amble, Acklington, Hauxley, and 14 other tnshps. Warkworth is a borough by prescription, and a court leet is held annually at the "Sun Hotel." The castle stands on a rock, occupying a triangular space of about 5 acres. The ruin includes the wall, 35 feet in height, the corner towers, and part of the gateway and the keep, with its turrets and watch tower, from which there is an extensive prospect. It was formerly held by Roger Fitz Roger, and in 1327 was given to the Percys, who, with the exception of a short period in Richard II.'s time, were seated here till 1672. At a short distance from the castle are the chapel of the Percys and an hermitage, 18 feet by 7, hewn in the rock, and containing effigies of a lady and a hermit. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the woollen mills. There are some stone quarries; also coal, lime, and whinstone are found. On the banks of the river are several extensive corn mills. The soil is principally clay. Of late years a breakwater and pier have been constructed at the mouth of the Coquet, and the bar harbour has a fixed light erected in 1848. This place gives title of baron to the Duke of Northumberland. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £528, in the patron. of the Bishop of Carlisle. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, has a stained window by Middleton Dand, also effigies of Hugh de Morwick, a crusader. There is also the district church of Acklington, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £250. There are a borough school and a National school for both sexes, also a circulating library and reading-room. Near the church was a Benedictine cell to Durham Abbey, founded by Bishop Barnham in 1256. The Duke of Northumberland is lord of the manor and chief landowner. Market day is on Thursday. Fairs are held on the Thursday before 25th April, and on the 22nd November for cattle. Races take place on the common on the 14th May.

WARLABY, a tnshp. in the par. of Ainderby-Steeple, wap. of East Gilling, North Riding co. York, 2 miles S.W. of Northallerton, and 1½ mile from Ainderby railway station.

It is a station on the Wilts and Somerset branch of the Great Western railway, on the river Willey, and near the south-western boundary of Salisbury Plain. It is a petty sessions and polling town, including the hmlts. of Boreham and Bugley. Warminster is mentioned in Domesday Book as Guerminstre, and having been held in demesne by Edward the Confessor paid neither Danegeld nor Hidage. The manor subsequently came through the Mauduits, Hungerfords, Howards, and others, to the Thynnes, of Longleat. The town chiefly consists of one long street, well paved and lighted with gas. There are three banks, a savings-bank, and a town-hall, which last was designed by Mr. Blore, and erected in 1830, at the expense of the Marquis of Bath. The town was formerly noted for its broadcloth manufacture, which is now extinct, but an extensive malting trade is still carried on, and silk weaving has been introduced. Petty sessions are held monthly at the townhall, also the July quarter sessions, and county court is held on the first Tuesday in every month. Camden supposed this place to have been the site of the Roman Verlucio, and the neighbourhood abounds in objects of antiquity, including several barrows, one of which is called "King Barrow." The soil is chalky. The population of the parish in 1861 was 5,995, and of the town 3,675. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Sarum, val. £324, in the patron. of the bishop. WARNFORD. See WARRINGTON, co. Northumberland.

WARNFORD, a par. in the upper half of Meon-Stoke hund., co. Hants, 7 miles N.E. of Bishop's Waltham, and 9½ S.W. of Petersfield. The village is situated on the Titchfield rivulet. The par. includes the hmlt. of Riversdown. The manor was given by William the Conqueror to Hugh de Port, ancestor of the St. Johns of Basing, who had a mansion here called King John's House, built of flints set in grout-work, 80 feet by 54 feet, with walls four feet thick. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £502. The church, founded by the Saxon Wilfrid, contains several monuments, a Norman font, and an old confessional. The tower was rebuilt by Adam de Port after the Conquest. The parochial charities produce about £2 per annum. There is a school for both sexes, erected at the expense of E. R. Tunno, Esq., by whom it is supported. Warnford House and Belmont Cottage are the principal residences.

WARNHAM, a par. in the hund. of Singlecross, rape of Bramber, co. Sussex, 3 miles N.W. of Horsham, its post town, and 33 from London. The village is near the river Arun, and consists chiefly of one long narrow street extending N. and S. The parish is bounded on the N. by the county of Surrey, and near Warnham Mill is a sheet of water covering about 100 acres. Stone is quarried at Oldhouse Farm. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £191, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is an ancient structure, with a square embattled tower containing a clock and six bells. It was enlarged and repaired in 1848. The register dates from 1558. There is a National school for both sexes. Percy Bysshe Shelley, the poet, was born at Field Place, in this parish. WARRINGTON, a par., tnshp., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, locally in the E. div. of West Derby hund., co. Lancaster, 17 miles E. of Liverpool, 22 S.W. of Manchester, and 182½ from London by the London and North-Western railway, on which it is a first-class station; there are besides stations on the Warrington and Stockport and Warrington and Garston railways. It is situated on the river Mersey, which is navigable for small craft to the quay, and near the Sankey and Bridgwater canals. The par. includes, besides the borough of Warrington, extending into the adjoining tnshps. of Latchford and Thelwall in co. Chester, the tnshps. of Burton-Wood, Poulton-with-Fearnhead, Rixton-with-Glazebrook, and Woolston-with-Martinscroft. The soil is a fertile loam, and the land chiefly in rich pasture and market gardens. The town, which is a place of great antiquity, though one of the new boroughs, is traversed by the old Roman way to Condate, and by the old mail-coach road from London to Liverpool. In the Saxon times it was called Weringtun, and is mentioned in Domesday survey as Wallintun or Walentune, at which time it was the head of a hundred now merged in that of West Derby, and in the reign of Henry III. came to the Botelers of Bewsey, who founded an Austin friary here in 1380. It subsequently passed by marriage to the Stanleys, who built the bridge here across the Mersey for Henry VII. to cross over on his visit to Lathom Park, and afterwards to Dudley, Earl of Leicester. During the civil war it was twice taken from the Royalists by General Lambert, who routed the Scotch forces under Bailie in 1648, and again under Charles II. in 1651. In 1745 the old bridge was partly demolished, in order to stop the forces of the Pretender, but was rebuilt in 1812. On the passing of the Reform Act in 1832 it was made a parliamentary borough, with the privilege of returning one member, and in 1847 was incorporated as a municipal borough, including four wards in Lancashire and one in Cheshire. It is governed by a mayor, who is also returning officer, 9 aldermen, and 27 common councillors, with the style of "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Warrington." Its revenue is chiefly derived from the market tolls, farmed by the corporation now. A court leet is held occasionally by J. Ireland Blackburne, Esq., who is lord of the manor. Borough sessions are held before the mayor and justices, a court of sessions before the recorder, and petty sessions for the division every Monday. A county court sits on the first Thursday in each month, and the Board of Guardians weekly. The population of the municipal borough in 1861 was 24,643, and of the parliamentary 26,000. The town consists of several narrow streets, which have recently undergone much improvement, especially in paving and sewering. The principal public buildings are the townhall, in the Market-street, built in 1820; market-house, with some ancient timbered buildings adjoining; the sessions house and bridewell, in Irlam-street; the county-court house; union workhouse, in Froghall-lane, with a general hospital, fever hospital, and lunatic ward; assembly rooms, theatre, mechanics' institute, savings-bank, two branch banks, museum and library, in Bold-street, erected in 1857 at a cost of £3,000; public baths, in Leigh-street; and the Clergy Orphan Institution and Training School, occupying a site called "the Mount." There are also the depôt of the 4th Royal Lancashire Militia; gasworks, established in 1822; a dispensary, agricultural society, musical society, church institute, and public library, containing 6,000 volumes. The trade of the town is various, including wire-drawing, the manufacture of files and tools, glass works, nail, pin, and rope factories, shoe-making, sailcloth weaving, once the staple industry, cotton and fustian mills, but these three last have recently much declined. There are also iron foundries, breweries, maltings, chemical works, soap manufactory, besides weavers and turners. The salmon fishery has long been destroyed, owing to the pollution of the river by chemical and dye works. The Poor-law Union comprises 13 pars. and tnshps. in Lancashire, and 3 in Cheshire. The principal residences are Bewsey Hall, the old seat of the Botelers, now belonging to Lord Lilford; Orford Hall, the old seat of the Blackburnes; and Bank Hall, the seat of J. Wilson-Patten, Esq., M.P. for North Lancashire. Two weekly newspapers, the Guardian and the Advertiser, are published on Saturdays. The works of Mrs. Barbauld, John Howard the philanthropist, Roscoe, Dr. Farrar, and others were printed here. Of the academy, lately pulled down and sold, founded in 1757, "the nursery of men for future years," Barbauld was a scholar, and Taylor, author of the Hebrew Concordance, Enfield of the "Speaker," Priestley, and G. Wakefield were masters. Warrington gives title of earl to Earl Stamford. It is the head of a deanery in the archdeaconry of Liverpool and dioc. of Chester. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £800, of which the Rev. W. Queckett is the present rector. The church has lately been restored at a cost of £14,000, with tower and spire 300 feet high, dedicated to St. Helen, or, as it is called in Domesday book, of St. Elphin, and contains effigies and monuments of the Boteler, Booth, and Patten families, of Bank Hall. In addition to the parish church are the district churches of Trinity, St. Ann's, St. Paul, Hollinfare, Burton Wood, and Padgate, the livings of which are all perpet. curs., varying in val. from £300 to £160 and £96. The Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, General and Particular Baptists, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Wickliffites, Unitarians, and Society of Friends have chapels. The local charities produce about £1,300 per annum, besides almshouses. The schools are numerous and well-attended, including the Botelers' free grammar school, founded in 1526, with an income of about £800, where Tierney was educated; the Blue-Coat school, founded in 1665 by John Allen, with an income of £1,000 and 100 scholars; the Clergy Daughters' school, supported by voluntary contributions; the Training College for Schoolmistresses, besides National, infant, Sunday, ragged, and ladies' schools. Market days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held monthly for the sale of cattle, and on 18th July and 30th November for horses, cattle, and sheep.

WARTON-WITH-LINDRITH, a tnshp. in the par. of Warton, hund. of Lonsdale South of the Sands, co. Lancaster.

WARWICK, a midland co. of England. Its size is below the average of English counties, comprising under 900 square miles, and measuring 50 miles in length from N. to S., with an extreme breadth of 32 miles. It is bounded on the N. and N.W. by Derby and Stafford shires, on the N.E. by Leicestershire and the line of the ancient Watling Street, on the S. and S.E. by cos. Oxford and Northampton, on the S.W. by Gloucestershire, and on the W. by Worcestershire, and includes two small detached portions.—Of the Roman dominion there are many traces, including the sites of several towns and stations, as Tripontium and Manduessedum, mentioned by Antonine, the former of which Dugdale fixes at Dove, or Don-Bridge, and the latter at Mancetter, both on the line of the ancient Watling Street, which skirts the county on the N.E.; the Venonæ, of the same writer, which is fixed by Camden and others near High Cross, where the Watling Street and the Fosse Way intersect; and Alauna, mentioned in the Iter of Richard of Cirencester, now Alcester, on the Ryknield Way, which skirts the shire on the W. Roman remains have also been found at Birmingham and Coventry. On the conquest of Britain by the Saxons, the tribe of the Werings reduced this district, which was from them called Waringwick or Warwick, and formed part of the ancient principality of the Wiccas, afterwards incorporated in Mercia. The country was, during the 10th and 11th centuries, much devastated by the Danes, who established themselves in the principal towns except Warwick, which was defended, according to tradition, by the fabulous Guy, Earl of Warwick, whose bones, being those of the fossil elephant, are still shown at Warwick Castle. In the wars of the Roses, the southern half of the county, under the leadership of Earl Guy, the celebrated "king-maker," supported the Yorkist cause, and the northern half, with the men of Coventry, were supporters of the house of Lancaster. In the civil war of Charles I., the county generally embraced the cause of the parliament, being especially swayed by the influence of Lord Brooke. The first great battle of the war was fought at Edgehill, in the southern part of the county, in 1642, in which the royalists were driven back.—The only hills are branches of the Cotswold and of Edgehill, on the slope of which was formerly a colossal figure of a horse, now nearly obliterated by enclosures. The geological features of the county belong chiefly to the secondary formation, including a seam of coal, which extends for about 16 miles in length between Nuneaton and Coventry, by 3 miles broad at Bedworth; the other strata are oolite, lias, New Red sandstone, millstone grit, limestone, greenstone, and red marl. The chief soils are red loam, sandy loam, and clay, with lime. Nearly half of the land is in meadow and pasture, and the remainder chiefly arable, with some woodland and common, especially in that part of the county which was at one time occupied by the Forest of Arden.—The number of inhabitants is about 450 to the square mile, but nearly two-thirds of the population are seated in the chief towns of Birmingham, Coventry, Leamington, and Warwick. South Warwickshire mostly depends on its husbandry, and in 1861 had a population of only 101,508, whereas the northern division contained 460,347, the population of the whole county being, in 1861, 561,855, of whom about 22 per cent. were engaged in trade, manufacture, and commerce, and only 6 per cent. in agriculture. The old Warwickshire sheep is nearly run out, having been superseded by the new Leicester and a cross of the two breeds; but for folding, the South Downs are preferred.—The greater part of the shire is drained by the Avon, which, rising in Northamptonshire, enters the county by Dove Bridge, and after receiving the tributary streams of the Swift, Sow, Leame, Tachbrook, Dene, Stour, and Arrow, joins the Severn just after quitting the county. It has a course of about 57 miles through the county, becoming navigable at Stratford, and above Warwick is sometimes called the Dove. The northern part of the county belongs to the basin of the Trent by means of the Tame, which, entering the county from Staffordshire, receives the waters of the Rea from Birmingham, and afterwards those of the Blythe and Borne, finally joining the Anker at Tamworth, where it quits Warwickshire and flows northward into the Trent at Alrewas in Staffordshire. Its whole course is about 42 miles, of which 20 are in Warwickshire. A feeder of the Cherwell and of the Thames rises near Burton Dasset, draining a small tract in the S., which belongs to the basin of the Thames. Of these rivers only a small part of the course of the Avon below Stratford is navigable. But the deficiency of river communication is compensated in Warwickshire by its canals, which give ready access to the Trent, the Mersey, the Thames, and the Severn; the principal are the Grand Trunk or Trent and Mersey, Coventry, Oxford, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, Staffordshire and Worcestershire, Birmingham, Birmingham and Fazeley, Worcester and Birmingham, Stratford and Avon, Warwick and Birmingham, and Warwick and Napton. These traverse the greater part of the shire, and have been a chief cause of its rapid progress in wealth, manufacture, and agricultural industry. The railways form a close network, communicating with every part of the country by means of the London and North-Western, the Birmingham and Oxford, and the Trent Valley and Midland railways, besides which branch lines extend from Rugby to Leamington and Stamford, from Warwick to Coventry and thence to Nuneaton, from Hampton to Whitacre, and from the Oxford and Birmingham to Stratford-on-Avon. The chief roads are the highway from Shrewsbury to Holyhead, which enters the county between Daventry and Dunchurch, and passes over Dunsmore Heath, and through Ryton, Coventry, Meriden, and Birmingham; two main lines of road to Birmingham, the one by Buckingham and Banbury, and the other by Oxford through Shipston-on-Stour, Stratford-on-Avon, and Henley-in-Arden; the great Liverpool road crosses the northern part of the county, passing through Atherstone, and the principal road from Bristol to the N. passing through Birmingham and Sutton Coldfield; besides these, roads lead from Warwick by Southam to Daventry, and by Kenilworth to Coventry.—The shire is divided into two halves, called Northern Warwickshire and Southern Warwickshire, each with a separate commission of assize, and each returning two members to Parliament, thus forming virtually two counties. Of the northern division the City of Coventry was made the capital by Order in Council of the 3rd February, 1843, by which the shire of the city of Coventry was abolished; and of the southern division the ancient municipal and parliamentary borough of Warwick has for centuries been the county-town. The county is further divided into four hundreds, each of which contains several divisions. These four hundreds comprise the ten mentioned in Domesday survey: 1st, Hemlingford, in Domesday survey called Coleshill; 2nd, Knightlow, in Domesday survey comprising the three hundreds of Mereton, Stanley, and Bromelaw; 3rd, Barlichway, in Domesday survey, Pathelan and Fernecumbe; and 4th, Kineton, in Domesday survey comprising four hundreds—Berricestone, Foxhole, Honesberie, and Tremelan. The borough and county-town of Warwick, with two members, and a population in 1861 of 10,570, is included in Kineton or Kington hundred; the city of Coventry, with two members, and a population of 41,647, in Knightlow hundred; and the municipal and parliamentary borough of Birmingham, which fairly claims to rank as the capital of the midland counties, with two members, and a population of 296,076, in Hemlingford hundred. The municipal boroughs are Stratford-on-Avon and Sutton Colefield, besides Tamworth, chiefly in Staffordshire. The market towns are Alcester, Atherstone, Coleshill, Henley-in-Arden, Kenilworth, Kington, Leamington Priors, Nuneaton, Rugby, Solihull, and Southam, besides about 400 villages and hamlets, 198 parishes, 8 parts of parishes, and 9 extra-parochial places.—The chief seats of manufacture are at Birmingham and Coventry, the former celebrated for its hardware, arms, and toys, and the latter for ribbons and silks, but clocks and watches are also largely manufactured. The other seats of industry are Astley, Chilvers Coton, Foleshill, Nuneaton, and Sow for ribbons and silks, Atherstone for hats, Kenilworth for combs, Tamworth and Berkeswell for flax and yarn, Alcaster, Ipsley, Lambourne, and Studley for needles, and Warwick for worsted and rush mats. There are also many hands employed in the collieries, iron mines, brick and lime-kilns, and stone quarries, besides brewing and paper-making, which are carried on upon a large scale. The government is administered by a lord-lieutenant, sheriff or chairman of sessions, about 40 deputy-lieutenants, and 115 magistrates. The county is comprised within the midland circuit and military district, and belongs to the Birmingham bankruptcy court. For ecclesiastical purposes it forms part of the dioc. of Worcester, province of Canterbury.

WARWICK, a post and market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, and county town of South Warwickshire, locally situated in the Warwick div. of Kington hund., co. Warwick, 90 miles N.W. of London by road, 100 by the London and North-Western, and 107½ by the Great Western railway. It is situated on the banks of the river Avon, near the junction of the Birmingham and Napton canals, and closely adjoining the town of Leamington. It was almost destroyed in the early wars of the Danes, but was restored by the Lady Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great, who built a fort here in 914. At the time of the Domesday survey it contained 261 houses, when it was held by the Danish nobleman Thurkil, or Turcil, and was shortly after protected by a ditch and gates. It subsequently came to Henry de Newburgh, the first Earl of Warwick, who rebuilt the castle, which was surrendered by Stephen to Prince Henry, in 1153, and was surprised and partly destroyed in the baronial wars of Henry III. In the reign of Edward I. the streets were paved and the town walled round. In the same reign it first sent members to parliament, and in the succeeding one of Edward II. was the scene of the execution of the king's favourite, Gaveston, by Guy Earl of Warwick in 1312. It was here that the king-maker, Warwick, imprisoned Edward IV. in 1468, and subsequently received him in 1470. In the time of Philip and Mary the town received its first charter of incorporation, and was visited by Queen Elizabeth and James I., who gave the castle, then used as a gaol, to Sir Fulke Greville, whose kinsman, Lord Brooke, garrisoned it in 1642 for the parliament. It was much damaged by fire in 1694, and was visited by William III. in 1695. The castle and earldom have successively belonged to the families of Turchil, De Newburgh, Le Plessetis, Maudit, De Beauchamp, Nevill, Plantagenet, Dudley, Rich, and Greville, the family name of the present earl. The castle, which stands on a solid rock, in which the cellars are excavated, overlooking the river, is still the great attraction of the town. The great hall is 62 feet long by 40 wide, containing a collection of ancient armour, and the room contains paintings by ancient masters, including the original of Charles I. on horseback by Vandyke. In one of the greenhouses is the "Warwick Vase," presented to the late Earl by Sir William Hamilton. Above the castle the Avon is crossed by a stone bridge of one arch 100 feet in span, connecting the town with a suburb on the left bank. The streets are spacious, well paved, and lighted, and the houses generally modern. The principal public buildings are the county hall and courts, with a room 100 feet by 65; courthouse and assembly-room, with portraits of Henry VIII. and Charles II.; market house, on arches, surmounted by a dome; county gaol, recently erected; savings-bank, three commercial branch banks, theatre, race-stand, museum of the Archæological Society, gas and water works, dispensary, and the earl's mill. The business is chiefly in connection with the corn and general trade, but there is a considerable hat manufactory and some large flour mills. There are also malthouses, iron-foundries, breweries, rope-walks, and numerous wharves on the Napton and Birmingham canals. The population of the borough in 1851 was 10,973, inhabiting 2,229 houses, and in 1861 10,570, inhabiting 2,272 houses. The boundaries of the municipal and parliamentary boroughs are conterminous, the old bounds remaining unaltered by the Reform Act of 1832. It has returned two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I. Under the Municipal Reform Act the borough is divided into two wards, governed by a mayor, who is also returning officer, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, with the style of "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Warwick." The municipal revenue is about £1,200. It is the place of election for the southern division of the county, and the head-quarters of the county militia. The assizes and quarter-sessions for the county, quarter-sessions for the borough, and a county court are held here. Warwick gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of Worcester. There were anciently 8 churches in the town, of which 3 only now remain. The livings are St. Mary's, a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £300, in the gift of the lord chancellor; St. Nicholas, a vic.,* with the cur. of All Saints annexed, val. £220; and St. Paul's, a perpet. cur.,* val. £150, in the patron. of the vicar of St. Mary's. The church of St. Mary, situate in Old-square, is an ancient foundation, and was made collegiate by Roger Earl of Warwick, in 1123. The body of the present edifice was rebuilt in 1704, but the lady chapel and choir was built by the Beauchamps in the 14th century. It has a carved roof and stalls, effigies of the Beauchamps and Dudleys, several brasses, the earliest dated 1401, and the tomb of Cartwright, the Puritan. The church of St. Nicholas was rebuilt on the site of an ancient nunnery in 1780. St. Paul's district church, situated in Friar-street, has a stained window presented by the late Countess of Warwick; All Saints is situated at Emscote. The Wesleyans, Independents, Baptists, Roman Catholics, Unitarians, and Society of Friends have chapels. There is a public library, and a weekly newspaper, the Warwick Advertiser, is published in the town. The college, founded by Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, in the reign of Henry VI., has an income from endowment of £400, besides four exhibitions to Oxford University of £40 each for four years; there are also National, British, infant, and industrial schools, and Lady Greville's free school, held in St. Peter's chapel, over the eastern gateway of the town, which has an income from endowment of £250. The local charities produce about £8,000 per annum, including the endowment of Henry VIII. to the church, clergy, and schools; Sir Thomas White's bequest of £11,511 to be employed by way of loans to deserving inhabitants, and the endowment of several sets of almshouses, including the Leicester Hospital, founded by Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, for a master and 12 brethren, impotent or infirm men, which number has been recently increased to 20, who receive a pension of £80 per annum. The buildings consist of the brethren's lodgings and, public kitchen, forming a quadrangle; the ancient chapel of St. James, over the western gateway of the town, originally founded as a guild by Roger, Earl of Warwick, in the reign of Henry I., and an old hall. On the W. side of the town is a racecourse, where the races take place twice annually, in March and September. Market day is on Saturday. Fairs are held on the second Monday in January, February, March, April, June, July, August, September, and November, and on the first Saturday in Lent, 12th May, 12th October, last Monday in October, and the Monday prior to St. Thomas's day.

WARWICK, a div. of the hund. of Kington, co. Warwick, containing the borough of Warwick, and the pars. of Barford, Charlcote, Chesterton, Lapworth, Moreton-Morrell, Newbold-Pacey, Packwood, Tanworth, Wasperton, Wellesbourne-Hastings, and part of Bishop's Tachbrook; comprising 32,640 acres.

WARWICK, a par. partly in the ward of Eskdale, and partly in that of Cumberland, co. Cumberland, 4 miles N.E. of Carlisle, its post town, and 6 from Brampton. The village is situated on the western bank of the river Eden, near its confluence with the Irthing. The former stream is here crossed by a stone bridge of three arches. The par. includes the tnshps. of Aglionby and Little Corby. This place was the site of the ancient Virosidum, where the sixth cohort of the Nervii was stationed. In the vicinity are some Roman earthworks. The soil consists of sand and loam. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to that of Wetheral, in the dioc. of Carlisle. The church was once a rect. belonging to the Abbey of St. Mary, at York. Warwick Hall is the principal residence.

WARWICK-BRIDGE, a tnshp. in the par. of Wetheral, Eskdale ward, co. Cumberland. It adjoins the par. of Warwick, and includes the hmlt. of Burnriggs. The river Eden is here crossed by the new bridge to the opposite village of Warwick. A party of royalists were routed here by General Lambert in 1648. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton mills and bleaching-grounds. There is a Roman Catholic chapel.

WASDALE-HEAD, a tnshp. in the par. of St. Bees, ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 16 miles from Whitehaven, its post town, 11 S.W. of Keswick, and 10 N.E. of Ravenglass. It is situated in a narrow valley among the hills at the head of Wast Water. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £80, in the patron. of the Incumbent of St. Bees.

WASDALE NETHER, or STRANDS, a chplry. in the par. of St. Bees, ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 7 miles from Ravenglass, 4 E. of Gosforth, and 7 from the Drigg station, on the Whitehaven and Furness Junction line of railway. The village is situated amongst the hills, near the sources of the rivers Irt and Esk, under the Cinderdale Falls. The surface is hilly, and the land principally unenclosed pasture and waste, with a small proportion of arable and woodland. The lake Wast Water, situated about 1½ mile from the village, is 3 miles long, half a mile broad, and 45 fathoms deep, or about 15 fathoms below the level of the sea. It abounds with fish, and has never been known to freeze. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £66, in the patron. of the Incumbent of St. Bees. The church contains tablets of the Rawson family, and a stone font presented in 1855 by Mrs. Rawson. There is a parochial school, in which a Sunday-school is also held. Gale Syke and the Hall are the principal residences. The latter has rare coniferæ, pines, &c.; among them is a specimen of the Araucaria imbricata 20 feet in height. General Wyndham is lord of the manor.

WASPERTON, a par. in the Warwick div. of Kington hund., co. Warwick, 4 miles S.W. of Warwick, its post town, and 103 from London. The village is situated on the river Avon. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £230, in the patron. of the Rector of Hampton Lucy. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has been recently restored and enlarged. It was formerly a chapel-of-ease to Hampton Lucy, at which place the free grammar school is open to children of this parish. The parochial charities produce about £10 per annum. There is a National school, supported by the incumbent.

WASS, a tnshp. in the par. of Kilburn, wap. of Birdforth, North Riding co. York, 5 miles S.W. of Helmsley. The village is situated near the ruins of Byland Abbey, and sheltered by wooded hills. The soil consists of clay, and there is a quarry of oolite stone, of which Byland Abbey was built. There is an endowed parochial school for both sexes, and at which a Sunday-school is held. S. Stapylton, Esq., is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WASSAND, a tnshp. in the par. of Sigglesthorne, East Riding co. York, 2 miles S.W. of Hornsea. It is joined with Seaton.

WAST WATER, a lake of co. Cumberland. It gives name to Wast Dale, at the head of the river Irt, and is surrounded by ragged rocks and fells. It is 3 miles in length by half a mile wide, and abounds in trout and other fish.

WATCHET, a tnshp., seaport, and market town in the par. of St. Decuman, hund. of Williton, co. Somerset, 5 miles E. of Dunster, and 18 W. of Bridgwater, to which it is a subport. It is the terminus of the West Somerset railway. It was called by the Saxons Wecedport, and was several times burnt by the Danes in the 9th and 10th centuries. At the Conquest it was given by William I. to the Mohuns, and once returned members to parliament in the reign of Edward I. The town is situated in a creek on the coast of the Bristol Channel, and has a tidal harbour of ten acres, which has recently been improved by the construction of a breakwater. It is sheltered from all winds, having piers on the E. and W. sides, with quays and a landing-slip. A considerable trade is carried on in grain, flour, malt, iron ore, coal, and timber. There are also an iron foundry, extensive paper-mills, lime works, and a cloth manufactory. The population of the town in 1861 was about 1,000. It is a coast-guard station, and manorial courts are held annually by the Wyndham family. The cliffs in the vicinity abound with alabaster and limestone, in which are embedded fossil fish, icthyosauri, and traces of strontian. For church, &c., see DECUMAN, ST. Market day is on Saturday. A fair is held on the 17th November.

WATCHFIELD, a tnshp. in the par. and hund. of Shrivenham, co. Berks, 4½ miles S.W. from Great Farringdon, its post town, and 1 mile from Shrivenham. The village is situated on the Great Western railway, near the river Cole. The living is a cur. annexed to the vic. of Shrivenham, in the dioc. of Oxford. The church was taken down in 1770. There is a charity school for both sexes.

The village is situated near the river Hamps, which here flows underground for about three miles to the neighbourhood of Ilam, where it joins the river Manifold. In the par., which includes the vils. of Waterhouses and Winkshill, are an iron foundry, two paper mills, and several corn mills. The soil is clay, upon a substratum of limestone and gritstone. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £60. The church is dedicated to St. James. The parochial charities produce about £7 per annum, which go to the free school. The Wesleyans have a chapel. A wake is held on the nearest Sunday to 10th August.

WATERFOOT, a hmlt. in the bar. of Lower Glenarm, co. Antrim, Ireland, near Cushendall.

WATERFORD, a maritime co. in the prov. of Munster, Ireland, is bounded on the N. by the cos. of Tipperary and Kilkenny, E. by the co. of Wexford, S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by the co. of Cork. It lies between 51° 56′ and 52° 20′ N. lat., and 6° 58′ and 8° 8′ W. long. Its greatest length from E. to W. is 52 miles, and from N. to S. 28 miles. Its area is 721 square miles, or 461,553 acres, of which 325,345 are arable, 105,496 uncultivated, 23,408 under plantations, 1,525 in towns and villages, and 5,779 under water.—The population in 1841, including the city of Waterford, was 196,187; in 1851 it had decreased to 164,035; and in 1861 to 134,242. The number of inhabited houses in 1861 was 21,492, 1,026 were uninhabited, and 53 were in course of building. The poor-law valuation in 1851 was £326,979, and the general valuation in 1861 was £315,610. The number of persons from this county who emigrated from Irish ports with the expressed intention of not returning, between May, 1851, and December, 1865, was 49,525, or 30 per cent. of the population at the former date.—The ancient inhabitants are thought to have been a Belgic colony, called the Menapii, who extended into Wexford. During the 3rd century a portion of the tribe of Desii, or Decii, who occupied that part of the county of Meath now called Deece, migrated southwards, and established themselves in that part of this county lying between Carrick-on-Suir and Dungarvan, and eastwards to Waterford Harbour. In the 9th century a body of Danes settled themselves in the territory about the city of Gaultier. When the English in the 12th century landed in the S., Waterford was quickly overrun, and the greater part of the country was granted by Henry II. to Robert le Poer, his marshal, and the western districts were included in the grant of Cork to Milo de Cogan and his companions. The possessions of Robert le Poer descended by marriage to the Beresford family, who still hold large property in the county. During the wars towards the close of Elizabeth's reign the county suffered severely by the sword and from famine, as also in the civil war of Charles I., and in the rebellion of 1798, when the county was disturbed by bands of Whiteboys, or Levellers, and agrarian outrages were not unfrequent.—The surface in the northern and western districts is rugged and mountainous. The principal ranges of hills are the Cummeragh, or Monavoulagh Mountains, which rise from the valley of the Suir, near Clonmel, and attain elevations of 2,597, 2,504, 2,478, and 2,387 feet, being among the wildest in Ireland. The Knockmiledown mountains occupy the north-western corner, extending into Tipperary, and at one point rise 2,609 feet high. To this range belongs Mount Melleray, with the abbey of St. Bernard la Trappe, by the monks of which upwards of 200 acres of mountain land have been reclaimed. The valley of the Blackwater is rich and undulating; its eastern flank consists of a broad based mountain summit called Drum. The central parts are undulating, with hills and low ridges interspersed by vales and hollows. The coast line is regular, affording little shelter for shipping. Immediately to the W. of Brownstown Head, at the entrance to Waterford Harbour, is Tramore Bay, the beach of which is flat and dangerous to shipping. The line of coast westward to Dungarvan Harbour, a distance of twenty miles, is rocky and dangerous; in some places the cliffs rise 250 feet, and contain several natural caverns of considerable extent. From Helwick Head, the southern boundary of Dungarvan Harbour, it runs in a south-westerly direction to Ardmore Point, and then bends north-westerly to Youghal, about 5 miles distant. This part of the coast is generally flat.—The principal river is the Suir, which comes from Tipperary, and after forming the northern boundary of the greater part of the county, falls into Waterford Harbour. It is joined by the Nier from the Cummeragh mountains, and is navigable for small vessels to Carrick-on-Suir. The Blackwater, also a noble river, rises in Kerry, and flows due E. across the county of Cork to Cappoquin, where it turns southwards and falls into the sea at Youghal. It receives in this county the waters of the Bride, and is navigable to Cappoquin for vessels of 70 tons. There are some small lakes among the Cummeragh mountains.—The Waterford and Kilkenny railway opens direct communication with Dublin and the N., and the Waterford and Limerick line with the W. There is a short line of 8 miles from the city of Waterford to the bathing-place of Tramore. It is intended to make a railway to Wexford, and there join the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford line. The principal roads are from Waterford to Cork, passing Cappoquin and Youghal; from Dungarvon to Clonmel; and two from Dungarvon to Youghal.—The geological character of the county varies. The eastern half is formed of transition rocks, as clay, slate, graywacke, and graywacke slate. In Glenpatrick, near Clonmel, good roofing slates are extensively quarried. Old conglomerate rocks, and formations of purple, red, green, and grey clay slate abound in the western districts. The valley of the Blackwater is of floetz limestone, and contains all the fossils of the carboniferous limestone, whilst the old red and yellow limestone occupies the central parts. Potter's clay is found in many places, and marble is quarried near Cappoquin and Whitechurch. There is an extensive copper mine at Knockmahon, from which 682 tons of ore, of the value of £25,657, were sold in Swansea during the year 1863. Lead and iron mines have also been worked, and silver has been got at Carysfort and Bonmahon.—The climate is variable, and the S. and S.W. winds which prevail are occasionally violent; it is, however, considered healthy. The surface is in many places marshy, and the soil is generally thin and poor, but some rich districts are found in the valley of the Blackwater, and in the central parts of the county. In 1866 there were 104,206 acres under crops, of which 18,786 acres were of wheat, 31,158 acres of oats, 1,799 acres of barley, bere, and rye, 20,713 acres of potatoes, 10,904 acres of green crops, 153 acres of flax, and 20,693 acres of meadow and clover. Dairy farming is extensively carried on, and large quantities of butter and bacon are exported. A cotton factory has been established at Portlaw, containing 30,292 spindles and 940 looms, and driven by steam and water power; it employs 1,412 persons. There are also four woollen factories, with 2,760 spindles and 49 looms, and employing 93 persons. The fishery district of Waterford extends from Bannow to Ballyvoile Bridge, embracing 76 miles of sea-coast, and trawling is practised to a considerable extent. The number of vessels and boats engaged at the fishery in 1864 was 336, employing 1,269 men and boys. There is a small bank in the estuary of the Suir producing oysters.—The county is in the diocese of Waterford and Lismore, now joined to the see of Cashel and Emly. In the Roman Catholic distribution it remained an independent diocese, which is suffragan to Cashel. Of the population in 1861, 5,197, or 3·9 per cent., were members of the Established Church, 127,654, or 95·1 per cent., were Roman Catholics, and 1,401, or 1 per cent., belonged to other denominations, or were unspecified. The county returns five members to parliament, two for the county at large, having a constituency of 3,477 in 1865, two for the city of Waterford, and one for the borough of Dungarvan. The county is divided for civil purposes into eight baronies—Coshmore and Coshbride, Decies within Drum, Decies without Drum, Gaultier, Glenahiry, Kilculliheen, Middlethird, and Upperthird, and contains 82 parishes. Its government is intrusted to a lord lieutenant and custos, high sheriff, 20 deputy lieutenants, and 3 resident and about 94 local magistrates. It belongs to the Leinster circuit; the assizes are held at Waterford. Quarter sessions are held at Carrickbeg, Dungarvan, and Lismore, and petty sessions at 16 places. The county gaol, county infirmary, and district lunatic asylum are at Waterford. The county belongs to the Cork military district, and there are barrack stations at Waterford and Dungarvan. Fairs are held at 32 places, and there are 5 market towns. The poor-law unions are Dungarvan, Kilmacthomas, Lismore, and Waterford, containing 16 dispensary districts.—The principal seats are Lismore Castle, Duke of Devonshire; Curraghmore, Marquis of Waterford; Clashmore House, Earl of Huntingdon; Summerville, Earl Fortescue; Dromana, Lord Stuart de Decies; Barron Court, Barron, Bart.; Cappoquin House, Keane, Bart.; Curraheen, Kennedy, Bart.; Mount Rivers, Musgrave, Bart.; besides numerous residences of the local gentry.—There are Druidical remains at Dunmore, Dun Hill and Kilmacombe, and the ruins of churches, abbeys, and castles may be seen in many parts of the county. There are traces of a large double trench, called "the Trench of St. Patrick's Cow," extending across the Blackwater towards Lismore, and also of one from Cappoquin into the county of Cork. There are chalybeate springs in the barony of Gaultier, and also at Clonmel, and between Dungarvan and Youghal. The county confers the title of marquis on the Beresford family, and of earl upon that of Talbot, and the barony of Decies gives the title of baron to a branch of the Beresfords.

WATERFORD, a county of a city, market town, seaport, parliamentary borough, episcopal city, and the capital of co. Waterford, Ireland, 94 miles S.S.W. from Dublin, 76 N.E. from Cork, and 32 S.W. from Wexford. It was founded by the Danes in 850, and soon became a place of considerable importance. In 1170, Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, took it by assault, and considerably enlarged it. King John resided here for some time, and granted to it its first charter, which was annulled by James I., but after nine years was restored by Charles I. Cromwell besieged the town unsuccessfully in 1649, but it was taken in the following year by Ireton. James II. embarked at this harbour for France after the battle of the Boyne, and the city surrendered to William, who remained here for some time. It had previously been visited by different sovereigns, and had received many charters and other marks of royal favour. The city, which is about 12 miles from the sea, is situated wholly on the right bank of the Suir, here 230 to 350 yards in breadth; it is here joined by St. John's river, which falls into it on the S. side of the city. The principal streets are the Quay, a mile in length, and the Mall, the houses of which are regular and well built; but in the older parts the streets are irregular and the houses ill-arranged. There is a suburb on the left bank of the river. The corporation consists of the mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors, elected from five wards. The old borough was co-extensive with the old county of the city, and continues to be the parliamentary borough, which returns two members to parliament, and in 1865 had a constituency of 1,124; but the municipal boundaries are much less extensive, being only 668 acres in extent. The population in 1861 was 23,202, of whom 1,989 were members of the Established Church, 20,429 Roman Catholics, 234 Presbyterians, 266 Methodists, 153 Quakers, and 131 belonging to other denominations. The cathedral is 170 feet long; there are two parochial churches. The Roman Catholic cathedral is of the Ionic order of architecture, and there are five other Roman Catholic churches; also Presbyterian, Baptist, Independent, Methodist, and Friends' meeting-houses. The other public buildings are the townhall, custom-house, and union workhouse, the Protestant episcopal palace, the Roman Catholic college of St. John, an endowed school, blue-coat schools for boys and girls, district model National school, the city and county court houses and gaols, the district lunatic asylum, besides several hospitals, almshouses, and other charitable institutions. The assizes for both county and city are held in the city, also quarter sessions. The mayor has a court for suits of wages, and petty sessions are held on every Friday. Market-days are Mondays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. Fairs are held on 4th May, 24th June, 25th October, and on the first Monday in every month.

WATFORD, a par., post, and ancient market town in the hund. of Cashio, or lib. of St. Alban's, co. Herts, 7 miles S.W. of St. Alban's, and 15 N.W. of London by road, or 17¾ by the London and North-Western railway, which has a first-class station and hotel, called "The Clarendon;" there are also branch lines to St. Alban's and Luton, and to Rickmansworth and Uxbridge. It is situated on the right bank of the river Colne, here crossed by a bridge, and near the Grand Junction canal and the tunnel of the North-Western railway, one mile 170 yards in length, and which cost above £140,000. In the Saxon times it belonged to St. Alban's Abbey. In 1689 a mineral spring was discovered here, the water of which becomes as black as ink when mixed with nutgalls. The par. includes, besides the town of Watford, the vil. of Bushey, the ecclesiastical district of St. Andrew's, and the hmlts. of Cashio, Leavesden, and Oxhey. The population of the parish in 1861 was 7,418, and of the town 4,385. The town consists chiefly of one main street, near a mile and a half in length, at the intersection of the ancient Watling Street with the roads from London to Aylesbury, and from Uxbridge to St. Alban's. The principal public buildings are the market-house, a long rough-cast building, resting on wooden pillars; a new County Court house, in King-street; a post-office, recently erected; union poorhouse, savings-bank, two branch banks, and a literary institute; also silk, paper, and flour mills, situated on the river. A considerable trade is done in malt, there are two extensive breweries, a tan yard, coach-building works, gasworks, an iron foundry, manufactory for agricultural implements, also straw plaiting and silk winding. The town is under the management of a local board of health, by whose authority extensive sewage and drainage works have recently been effected, a constant supply of water obtained on the high-pressure principle, and the streets and roads much improved. The town is well lighted with gas, and partially paved. An extramural cemetery has recently been laid out with two chapels. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £670. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There are also the district churches of St. Andrew's, Leavesden, and Oxhey, the livings of which are perpet. curs. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists have chapels. There are National, British, and infant schools, two old-established free schools, the one founded in 1641, by Francis Coombe, for 11 boys, and the other in 1704, by Elizabeth Fuller, for 40 boys and 20 girls; also almshouses for 12 widows and a literary institution. The Poor-law Union of Watford comprises 6 parishes. In the vicinity are Cashiobury Park, the seat of the Earl of Essex, and Grove Park, of the Earl of Clarendon. Market day is Tuesday. Fairs are held on Whit Tuesday and 9th September.

WATFORD, a par. in the hund. of Guilsborough, co. Northampton, 5 miles N.E. of Daventry, its post town, and half a mile from the Crick railway station. WATLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Clackclose, co. Norfolk, 5 miles N. of Downham-Market, its post town, and 6 S.W. of Lynn. It is a station on the Great-Eastern railway. The village is situated on the eastern bank of the river Ouse, over which is a bridge. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich. The church, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, has an old font and some tombs. The parochial charities produce about £18 per annum. There are a Sunday-school for both sexes, and a chapel for the Wesleyans.

WATLINGTON, a par. and small town in the hund. of Pyrton, co. Oxford, 8 miles S.W. of Thame, and 14 S.E. of Oxford. It is situated between the two high roads leading from London to Oxford, about half a mile from the Roman way Icknield Street, and under the Chiltern hills, which rise above the town, and command an extensive view over three counties. On one of the spurs of the Chilterns is a figure of an obelisk cut on the face of the chalk. The par. includes the hmlts. of Greenfield and Wormondiscombe. It is mentioned in Domesday book as Watelintone, and was then held by Robert de Oilgi, from whom it came to Roger Bigod, Piers Gaveston, the De la Beches, and other noble families. It is supposed to have derived its name from the Saxon watelar, in allusion to its having been a British village formed of wattles or wicker. The town-hall is an old building, standing near the centre of the town, and used as a school for boys. The petty sessions for the hundred are held every alternate Saturday in a new court-house built for the purpose. There are two breweries and two corn mills, which latter are worked by a small rivulet. The soil consists of clay, with a subsoil of gravel and chalk. Two courts leet take place annually. The population in 1861 was 1,938. About three miles from the town is Chalgrove Field, where an engagement took place in 1643 between the Royalists and Parliamentarians, in which John Hampden was slain and the Royalists were victorious. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £220. The church, dedicated to St. Mary or St. Leonard, contains tombs of the Hornes, and three brasses, one bearing date from 1485. There are several parochial charities and a small church estate. There are two schools, one for boys and one for girls, and chapels for the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists. Near the church is the moated site of a castle, built in 1338 by the De la Beches. There is also a camp at Britwell Hill. T. S. Carter, Esq., and Rev. W. P. Hulton, are lords of the manor. There are two statute and pleasure fairs held on the Saturday before and the Saturday after Old Michaelmas.

WATNALL CANTELOPE and WATNALL CHAWORTH, hmlts. in the par. of Greasley, co. Notts, 6 miles N.W. of Nottingham.

WATTEN, a par. in the co. of Caithness, Scotland. It is nearly circular in form, and about 8¼ miles in diameter. The surface is undulating but low, being in some parts little more than 20 feet above sea-level. The soil is rich and productive, with the exception of that of the moors, which are of considerable extent. In the northern part of the parish is Loch Watten, extending 3 miles from W. to E., with a breadth of from 3 to 10 furlongs; it abounds in eels and trout, and is much frequented by wild ducks and sea fowl. The southern part of the parish is watered by Loch Toftingall. The confluent streams from the above-mentioned lakes form the river Wick, which flows 4 miles eastward towards the boundary. The predominant rocks are flagstone, limestone, and trap. The village of Watten is about 9 miles N.W. of Wick. The parish is traversed through its central districts by the S. road from Thurso to Wick, and across its S.W. extremity by the road from Thurso to Dornoch. This par. is in the presb. of Caithness and synod of Sutherland and Caithness. The stipend of the minister is about £222. There are a Free church parochial school, parochial library, and two other schools, also a mission church for the Halsary district. The principal seat is Heath House. A fair is held on the first Tuesday in December, old style.

WATTISFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Blackbourn, co. Suffolk, 3 miles S.W. of Botesdale, its post town, and 6 N.E. of Ixworth. The village is situated on the road from Bury St. Edmund's to Norwich. WATTON, a par. in the Bainton-Beacon div. of Harthill wap., East Riding co. York, 5 miles S. of Great Driffield, its post town. There are traces of a Gilbertine nunnery, founded by Eustace Fitz-John in 1150, on the site of a more ancient priory, which existed as early as 686. At the Dissolution its revenue was valued at £453 7*s.* 8*d.*, when its site and remains, which are still discernible, were given to John Dudley, Earl of Warwick. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £60. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

WATTON, a par. and market town in the hund. of Wayland, co. Norfolk, 13 miles from Thetford, its post town, and 21 S.W. from Norwich. It is situated on the river Wissey, near the borders of that part of the county of Norfolk commonly called Filand, or the "open country," and near Wayland, or Wailing Wood, the scene of the old ballad of "The Children in the Wood." It is a petty sessions town, principally consisting of one wide street. It has a bank, savings-bank, and Wayland Hall. An obelisk was erected in 1820, on the site of the ancient market cross, with a curious sculptured device containing a rebus on the name of the town; the cross was then demolished, but the stone bearing the device was placed in the front of a small square building which had been erected shortly after the great fire of 1673, which destroyed the greater portion of the town, with property to the amount of £10,000. A manorial court is held annually, and petty sessions for the hundred are held on the first Wednesday in each month. The population in 1861 was 1,365. The chief trade arises from its situation on a great thoroughfare, but considerable business is done in corn, malt, and butter; there is also a brewery. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £187. The church, dedicated to St. Mary or St. Giles, was built in the reign of Henry I., and was enlarged and restored in 1840. The interior contains several brasses and monuments, a stone crucifix, and an antique poor-box bearing date 1552. The parochial charities produce about £127 per annum, of which £65 is realised from fuel allotment. There are several almshouses, also a National school for both sexes. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. The Rev. W. H. Hicks is lord of the manor. Market day is on Wednesday. WEDMORE, a par. in the hund. of Bempstone, co. Somerset, 8 miles from Wells, 6 S.E. of Axbridge, and 4 from Shapwick railway station. It is situated on the turnpike road from Highbridge to Wells. The par., which is divided from the hund. of Wells by the river Axe, and bounded on the S. by the Brue, contains the tythgs. of Wedmore, the Borough, Churchland, Blackford, and Northload. Its name is said to have been originally Wet-Moor, owing to its having been under water nine months in the year; but within the present century it has been extensively drained. Wedmore is a polling place for the county elections, and an ancient borough governed by a portreeve chosen yearly at the manorial court, with water bailiffs, constables, and other officers. A court leet is held annually. The soil abounds with rich loam. This parish is noted for its Cheddar cheese, which is made here in large quantities. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £360, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is of the 14th century. The interior has some old monuments. The register dates from 1560. There are also the district churches of Theale and Blackford, the livings of which are both perpet. curs., val. £300 each. The parochial charities consist of J. Wollen's bequest of the interest of £1,000 for the poor, and of an endowment of £750 to the charity school, besides other bequests from different donors. There is a church Sunday-school held in the free school. The Wesleyans and Baptists have each a chapel and Sunday-school. A pot of silver coins of the reigns of Sweyn and Hardicanute was discovered in the churchyard. T. Barrow, Esq., is lord of the manor. Cattle fairs are held on the Monday prior to St. James's day, and the last Monday in September.

WEDNESBURY, a par., manufacturing and market town in the hund. of South Offlow, co. Stafford, 8 miles N.W. of Birmingham, 5 S.E. of Wolverhampton, and 118 N.W. of London, or 136½ by Great Western railway, and situated on the London and Holyhead high road, near the source of the Tame. It is a place of great antiquity, and was originally called Wodensburg, after the god Woden. Under the Normans it was a royal domain. The town has increased rapidly of late years, and its extension has been as marked as almost any town in the so-called "Black Country." In 1811 the population was 5,372; in 1831 it was 8,437; in 1851, 14,281; and in 1861 it had risen to 21,968. The population of the parish in 1861 was 21,968, and its area is 2,175 acres. The large increase in the last decennial period is accounted for by the extension of the iron manufacture and by the facilities afforded by freehold building societies. The London and North-Western and the Great Western railway companies have stations here. A branch of the Birmingham canal passes close to the town. For miles around, especially towards the N. and W., are coal pits, foundries, and blast furnaces innumerable; and almost all vegetation has disappeared. At night immense bodies of flame issue from the blast furnaces and the countless smaller fires of the foundries and works. Coal, iron, and limestone abound in the vicinity of the town, and a coal which produces intense heat, and therefore is admirably suited for the preparation and working of iron, is found here. The manufactures of the town are railway ironwork and carriages, axletrees, coach springs, gas tubing, water pipes, gun locks and barrels, hinges and screws. Among the principal manufactures are the iron, engineering, and Bessemer steel works; the Patent Shaft and Axle-tree; and the Crown Tube Works of Messrs. Russell and Sons. The town is lighted with gas from the West Bromwich gasworks, and has a good supply of water from Lichfield: there is a reservoir on Church-hill belonging to the waterworks company. A local board of health presides over the town. The local magistrates sit every alternate Tuesday, and the stipendiary for the district attends fortnightly. Wednesbury is within the jurisdiction of the Walsall County Court. The par. is in the dioc. of Lichfield and archdeaconry of Stafford. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is situated on the highest point of the town, and its tower and spire are seen from a considerable distance. In the interior are monuments of the Dudley and Parkes families. The living is a vicarage, val. £400, in the gift of the lord chancellor. St. John's, High-street, val. £300, was erected in 1844 at a cost of £5,200; St. James's, in the Holyhead road, val. £175. Within the parish is the perpetual curacy of Moxley. The Roman Catholics, Baptists, Congregationalists, Wesleyans, Methodist Free church, Primitive Methodists, and Methodist New Connexion, have chapels. There are National schools, British, Roman Catholic, and Wesleyan day schools, and numerous Sunday-schools, a mechanics' institute, workingman's club, and a subscription library and news-room. The Crown Tube Works also maintain a library and reading-room for their work-people. There is a music hall at the "Green Dragon," in the market-place, and a theatre in Earps-lane. Two banking companies have establishments here—the Staffordshire Joint-Stock Bank, Lloyd's Banking Company (late Messrs. Philip and Henry Williams). A branch of the National Savings-Bank Association is in High-street. The Wednesbury Advertiser is published on Saturdays. Market day is Friday. Fairs are held on 6th May and 3rd August. The wakes commence on the Sunday between the 4th and 10th of September.

WEDNESFIELD, a tnshp. in the par. of Wolverhampton, S. div. of Offlow hund., co. Stafford, 2 miles N.E. of Wolverhampton, its post town. At Wednesfield Heath is a station on the South Staffordshire railway. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of locks and keys, chain-cables, and other articles of iron. In this township were formerly two barrows, on the supposed site of the field where Edward the Elder beat the Danes in 911, one of which has been levelled. The population in 1861 was 8,553, and the ecclesiastical district of Wednesfield Heath 5,049. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £280, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, was built in 1750, and recently enlarged; there is also a new church at Wednesfield Heath. The parochial charities produce about £20 per annum. There are National schools for both sexes. The Independents, New Connexion Methodists, and Wesleyans have chapels. The inhabitants have the right of voting for the borough of Wolverhampton.

WEEDON, a hmlt. in the par. of Hardwicke, hund. of Cottesloe, co. Bucks, 3 miles N. of Aylesbury, and 13½ from Buckingham. The principal residence is The Lilies.

WEEDON-BECK, or WEEDON-ON-THE-STREET, a par. and post town in the hund. of Fawsley, co. Northampton, 4 miles S.E. from Daventry, and 8 from Northampton. It is a station on the North-Western railway, which here passes through a tunnel of 418 yards. The village is situated in a valley on the Grand Junction canal and the ancient way Watling Street, and near the source of the river Nene. It is divided into Upper and Lower Weedon, of which the latter is intersected by the Holyhead road, here joined by the Northampton and Daventry road. A nunnery was founded here by Werburgh, daughter of Wulfhere, King of Mercia, in 680, which, being burnt by the Danes in the 9th century, was refounded by William the Conqueror as a cell to Bec Abbey. The par. contains the Royal Military Depôt, having accommodation for 200,000 stand of arms, besides a great quantity of military stores. The building, which is situated above the village, consists of a centre with two detached wings, and on an eminence adjoining are barracks for 500 men. Between the two ranges of building is a cut communicating with the Grand Junction canal, and affording facility of conveyance to any part of the kingdom. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes, and in lace-making. Near Dodford Mill is "Gallows Furlong," where criminals were anciently executed. Courts leet are held occasionally, and a court baron annually. The population in 1861 was 2,189. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £300. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was originally built before the Conquest, but was rebuilt in 1825. The parochial charities produce about £231 per annum, of which £101 go to Billing's free school. There are National and infant schools. The Independents and Wesleyans have chapels and Sunday-schools. The Provost and Fellows of Eton College are lords of the manor.

WEEDON LOYS, a par. in the hund. of Greens-Norton, co. Northampton, 6¼ miles S.W. of Towcester, its post town, and 8 from Brackley. It contains the hmlts. of Milthorpe and Weston. St. Loy's mineral spring is in this parish. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £462, in the patron. of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Mary. Kent, 2½ miles N.W. of Crayford, and 3 S.E. of Woolwich. It is a modern village, situated on the main road from London to Canterbury and Dover. There is a free school, founded and endowed by Forster, with £70 per annum.

WELLINGBOROUGH, a par. and market town in the hund. of Hamfordshoe, co. Northampton, 10 miles N.E. of Northampton, and 7½ from Kettering. It is a junction station on the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western and Leicester section of the Midland railways. The town, which stands on the slope of a hill about a mile to the N. of the navigable river Nene, consists of four principal streets diverging from the market-place, which is in the centre of the town. The houses are built of red-sandstone, which abounds in the vicinity, and the streets are well-paved and lighted. It has two bridges, a townhall, union poor-house, two branch banks, and corn-exchange. The population in 1851 was 5,298, and in 1861, 6,067, and of the parish, 6,382. The woollen trade was formerly extensively carried on, and subsequently lace-making, but both these industries have declined. The principal manufacture is now that of boots and shoes for the London market. Ironstone has recently been discovered here, and blast furnaces are being erected for smelting the ore. Many improvements have of late years been made in the town, which has been brought under the government of the Health of Towns Act. A promenade has been formed by the Feoffees from the town to the railway station, which is about a mile distant. Petty sessions for the division are held in the new police-station fortnightly, and manorial courts yearly in October. It is also a polling-place for the county elections, and the seat of new county court and superintendent registry districts. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £400. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains some ancient screen-work and stalls. The E. window is ornamented with sculpture and tracery. There are numerous Dissenting chapels, and a meeting-house for the Society of Friends. A free grammar school adjoining the churchyard was founded by Edward VI., and endowed with the revenue of a guild of Our Lady the Virgin, once attached to the church, and subsequently augmented by a bequest of Richard Fisher in 1711. There are besides National, British, and infant schools, and a literary institute. The local charities produce about £900 per annum, including the school endowment and the town estate, which latter yields £700, appropriated to school and general purposes. The Poor-law Union comprises 3 parishes in Bedfordshire and 24 in Northamptonshire. Market-day is on Wednesday. Fairs are held on the Wednesday in Easter and Whitsun weeks, and on the 29th of October for cattle.

WELLINGHAM, a par. in the hund. of Launditch, co. Norfolk, 3 miles N.E. of Rougham, and 6 S.W. of Fakenham. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, united to that of Tittleshall-cum-Godwick. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The register dates from 1739. The parochial charities produce about £16, with fuel allotment. The Earl of Leicester is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WELLINGLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Tickhill, West Riding co. York, 2 miles N.W. of Tickhill. It is joined with Stancill and Wilsick.

WELLINGORE, a par. in the higher div. of Boothby-Graffo wap., parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 8 miles N.W. of Sleaford, and 10 S. of Lincoln. The village is situated on the cliff road between Lincoln and Grantham, near the line of the ancient Ermine Street, and on the edge of the oolite ridge, overlooking the vale of Belvoir and the Derbyshire hills. It includes the ext. par. lib. of Temple Bruer. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £206, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The register dates from 1550. There are two Wesleyan chapels, and a Church school. The parochial charities produce about £5 per annum. H. Nevile, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WELLINGTON, a div. of the hund. of South Bradford, co. Salop, contains the pars. of Atcham, Buildwas, Dawley Magna, Eaton Constantine, Ercall Magna, Eyton-upon-the-Wild-Moors, Leighton, Longdon-on-Terne, Roddington, Stirchley, Uppington, Upton Magna and Parva, Wellington, Withington, Wombridge, Wrockwardine, and Wroxeter, together comprising 54,460 acres.

WELLINGTON, a par. and market town in the above hund., co. Salop, 10½ miles E. of Shrewsbury, and 7½ S.W. of Newport. It has stations on the Great Western, Birmingham and Shrewsbury, and Shropshire Union railways. Here Charles I., on the breaking out of the civil war, first assembled his forces on the 19th September, 1642, and delivered in person the address recorded by Clarendon. The par. of Wellington, so called from its being situated on the ancient Watling Street, includes, besides the town of Wellington, the tnshps. of Aston, Dothill, Hadley, Horton, Lawley, Lee Gomery, Walcot, and Wappenshall, with the chplry. of Ketley, the ecclesiastical district of Christchurch, and the hmlts. of Arleston, Apley, Haybridge, Lawley Bank, and Newdale. The town of Wellington occupies a steep declivity about 2 miles S. of the Wrekin, which rises from the plain to the height of 1,320 feet above the sea-level, or 1,100 feet above the bed of the Severn, embracing from its summit an horizon from 350 to 400 miles in circumference, and comprising the greater part of 17 counties. This hill is said to be the highest in England for the circumference of its base, and has on its summit remains of an old fortification. In the immediate vicinity are the Shrewsbury and Shropshire Union canals, communicating directly with the navigable river Severn, and a part of the parish is bounded by the river Tern. The streets are mostly narrow, but have been much improved, and the town is lighted with gas under an Act of Parliament obtained in 1851. There are a townhall, newsrooms in the market place, gaol, union poorhouse, savings-bank, post-office, branch office of the Shropshire Banking Company, gas works, and baths at the Admin ston Spa, situated about 1½ mile from the town. The malting trade is extensively carried on, and much business is done in agricultural and mineral produce. There are iron foundries, corn-mills, a tannery, glass-factory, and several nail and agricultural implement manufactories. The population of the parish in 1851 was 11,554, and in 1861, 12,198, but of the town 5,576. The town is under a mayor and constables, and two clerks, who regulate the markets. The county magistrates hold petty sessions for the hundred monthly, and the lord of the manor a court leet annually in November, at which the civil officers are appointed. The county-court is held monthly in the townhall, and the poor-law guardians meet fortnightly on Thursday. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £900. The parish church of All Saints, which formerly belonged to the Abbey of Shrewsbury, was rebuilt in 1790, and repaired in 1847. St. Saviour's was built in 1838 at a cost of £3,600. There are also the district church of Christ Church, the new church at Hadley, and the old church of Ketley. The Wesleyans, Independents, Baptists, and Roman Catholics have chapels. There are National schools, built in 1855, Roman Catholic schools at Mill-Bank, a small free school, and Ick's and other almshouses. The Poor-law Union comprises 10 parishes. The Dukes of Sutherland and Cleveland, and Lords Berwick and Forester, are the chief landowners. Market day is on Thursday. Fairs are held on 29th March, 22nd June, 29th September, 17th November, Monday week before Christmas day, and on the last Monday in each of the other months.

WELLINGTON, a par. and market town in the hund. of Kingsbury, co. Somerset, 13 miles S.W. of Bridgwater, and 148 from London. It is a station on the Bristol and Exeter railway, which runs through the parish. The town of Wells, situated on the road from Bath to Exeter, given by King Alfred to Bishop Asser, afterwards came to the see of Wells, and later to the families of Somerset and Popham. It is written Walintone in the Domesday survey. The town is well built and contains several streets, the chief of which is half a mile in length. It is lighted with gas, well supplied with water, has a townhall, corn and provision market, market-house, police station, and union workhouse. The inhabitants are for the most part employed in the woollen, brick, tile, and agricultural implement manufactories. Coal mines and lime quarries in the vicinity afford some employment. The government of the town is vested in a bailiff and other officers chosen annually at the manorial court. Petty sessions are held weekly, and the county court monthly. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. with the curs. of West Buckland and Trinity annexed, £1,050, with house of residence. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, contains several monuments, the chief being that of Sir John Popham, Lord Chief Justice of England in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. The earliest date of the register is 1538. Trinity church is a modern structure at the W. side of the town. The Baptists, Independents, Wesleyans, Bible Christians, and Plymouth Brethren have chapels. There are schools, both British and National, for boys and girls; and almshouses for 6 men and 6 women, founded by Sir John Popham in 1604, and rebuilt in 1833. Thursday is market day, chiefly for corn, and fairs are held the Thursdays before Easter and Whitsuntide. The Wellington News and the Wellington Times, penny newspapers, are published here weekly. The population of the parish was 6,006 in 1861. The first Duke of Wellington took his title from this place, and the present Duke is lord of the manor. On the summit of Blackdown Hill, not far from the town, is a pillar in commemoration of the battle of Waterloo.

WELLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Grimsworth, co. Hereford, 5½ miles N. of Hereford, its post town, and 2½ S.W. of Moreton railway station. The village is situated on the road from Leominster to Hereford, in a valley surrounded by hills, and is watered by a branch of the river Lug. The soil is a red loam upon a subsoil of gravel. The land is partly in apple orchards and hop-grounds. There is a prebendal farm of 49 acres belonging to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £250, in the patron. of the Bishop of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, contains a brass of Sir Herbert Perrott. There is a small mixed school partly endowed, and a Sunday-school held in the church. The parochial charities produce about £60 per annum, including the endowments of Perrott's and Nott's almshouses for six aged men.

WELLINGTON, an ecclesiastical district in the par. of Stoke-upon-Trent, hund. of Pirehill, co. Stafford, 2 miles from Stoke-upon-Trent, and 16 N. of Stafford. It is situated near the river Trent and Grand Junction canal. The ecclesiastical district in 1861 contained a population of 5,555. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £150, in the patron. of the crown and bishop.

WELLINGTON HEATH, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Ledbury, hund. of Radlow, co. Hereford, 2 miles from Ledbury, and 15 S.E. of Hereford. It is situated in the vale of the Leadon, or Leddon, at the southern foot of the Malvern Hills, and near the Gloucester and Hereford canal. The tnshp. forms part of the Foreign of the manor of Ledbury, for which courts leet and baron are held. The living is a perpet. cur., in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £100, in the patron. of the bishop.

WELLOW, a par. in the South Clay div. of Bassetlaw wap., co. Nottingham, 1½ mile S.E. of Ollerton. The village is situated on the road from Worksop to Newark. A considerable extent of land is in hop-grounds, and upwards of 254 acres are in Wellow Park. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £90. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. There are an hospital and a dispensary, and an infant school built in 1854. Jordan Castle is an old seat once fortified by Jordan Foliot. The Earl of Scarborough is lord of the manor.

WELLOW, a hund. in co. Somerset, contains the pars. of Camerton, Charterhouse-Hinton, Comb-Hay, Corston, Dunkerton, English Combe, Farleigh-Hungerford, Forscote, Newton St. Loe, Norton St. Philip, Tellisford, Twerton, and Wellow; comprising 21,900 acres.

WELLOW, a par. in the above hund., co. Somerset, 4½ miles S. of Bath, and 5 W. of the Freshford station on the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth railway. The village is situated under Woodeboro' barrow, on the tramroad from the Welton collieries communicating with the Avon and Kennet and Radford canals. It is noted for its strawberry gardens, and has Bray's Down collieries near the hamlet of Sherscomb. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £350. The church, dedicated to St. Julian, was nearly rebuilt in 1370, and restored in 1845. The interior contains an oak roof, open oak seats, and several monuments to the Hungerford family. The register dates from 1561. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National and Sunday schools, the former endowed with £10 per annum. The parochial charities produce about £13 per annum. Among numerous other Roman relics, tesselated pavements, altars, pillars, and fragments of pateræ, were discovered here in 1644, 1670, and 1685. On the manor of Littleton is a Celtic burial-place, and near the extremity of the parish is the large barrow called Woodeboro'. A fair is held on the 20th October for cattle and sheep.

WELLOW, EAST, a par., partly in the hund. of Thorngate, co. Hants, and partly in the hund. of Amesbury, co. Wilts, 4 miles S.W. of Romsey. It is a scattered village situated between the two roads from Southampton to Salisbury. The living is a vic.,* united with that of West Wellow, joint val. £250. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The register dates from 1570. There are National and infant schools. W. E. Nightingale, Esq., is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WELLOW, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Amesbury, co. Wilts, 4½ miles N. of Romsey, and 1 mile S.E. of East Willow, with which it is united for ecclesiastical purposes. There is no church.

WELLS, a par. partly in the bar. of West Idrone, co. Carlow, and partly in that of Gowran, co. Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles from Leighlinbridge, which is partly included in this parish. It is situated on the river Barrow, and has a remarkable moat at Ballynochen. The soil is good, and there is a slate quarry. Near the village are the remains of a monastery and an ancient cross. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ossory, Ferns, and Leighlin, val. £370, in the patron. of the crown. There are two churches and several Roman Catholic chapels. Fairs are held on Ascension Thursday and on the 11th December.

WELLS, an ancient city, parliamentary and municipal borough, market, assize, session, polling, and union town, locally situated in the hund. of Wells Forum, Somersetshire, but having separate jurisdiction, 19 miles S. of Bristol, the same distance S.W

of Bath, and 120 S.W. of London. It has two railway stations, viz., on the East Somerset, and Somerset and Dorset railways. It is situated on the S side of the Mendip hills, by which it is sheltered from the N. winds. Wells was anciently called Tethiscine, Tudingtone, Welve, Wielia, Fonticuli, &c., and derives its name from the numerous springs in the neighbourhood, and more especially from that of St. Andrew, which, rising near the bishop's palace, flows through the south-western part of the city. In the year 704 Ina, king of Wessex, is said to have founded a collegiate church on the site of the present cathedral. In the reign of Edward the Elder, about the beginning of the 10th century, the town became the seat of a bishopric. About 1091 the bishopric was obtained by John de Villula, who removed the episcopal seat to Bath, and styled himself Bishop of Bath only. Bishop Robert, De Villula's successor, determined, about 1139, that the diocesan should be styled Bishop of Bath and Wells, and be enthroned on his admission in both churches. The town was first incorporated by Bishop Robert about 1140, which charter was subsequently confirmed with additional privileges by Bishops Fitzjocelin and Savaric, respectively between the years 1174 and 1192. The first royal charter was granted by King John in 1202, erecting the town into a free borough, constituting the men free burgesses, and granting a Sunday market and five annual fairs; since which various other charters have been granted by Edward I., Edward III., Richard II., Henry IV., Henry VI., and Elizabeth. The town has returned two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I., and under the late Corporation Reform Act is governed by a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councilmen, with the style of "mayor, masters, and burgesses of the city and borough of Wells. The revenue amounts to £979. It comprises the lib. of St. Andrew and the in-and-out pars. of St. Cuthbert, which contains the tythings or hamlets of Coxley, Easton, Horrington, with Burcott, Chilcott, Dulcott, Milton, Polsham, East Water, Walcombe, Wick, Whitnell, Wookey Hole, and Warminster. The acreage of the city and the in and out parishes is about 15,371. The population in 1851 was 7,401, and in 1861 it amounted to 7,443. Wells consists of four principal streets, with several minor ones, and is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water. The town possesses a literary and scientific institution, a mechanics' institution, and an agricultural society. There is a market-house with an area for a market-place, and the townhall, erected in 1780, contains some curious MSS. and portraits. There is a prison for the temporary safety of prisoners, a workhouse, and not far from the town stands the county lunatic asylum, which was established in 1848. Very little manufacture is now carried on in Wells; the silk trade has long been given up, as also the stocking manufacture. It was formerly noted for the manufacture of boots and shoes. In the neighbourhood are several extensive paper and corn mills, besides several breweries, and a brush factory, and gasworks. Lead, iron, and manganese are procured in the district, although not in such large quantities as in former years, and the neighbourhood, especially on the Mendip hills side, abounds with geological interest. The corn market has decayed, but the market for cheese is still important. There is a county court held in the city. The summer assizes for Somersetshire are held in Wells. Races are run annually in the vicinity. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, commuted gross val. £900, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. There are also the following district churches—viz., St. Thomas the Apostle, East Wells, perpet. cur., val. £90; Horrington, perpet. cur., val. £300, in the patron. of the Vicar of Wells; Coxley, perpet. cur., val. £300, and Easton, perpet. cur., val. £200, both likewise in the patron. of the Vicar of Wells. The parish church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, contains sepulchral chapels, some of which are of ancient date, and remains of a reredos in each transept. A new reredos has lately been placed in the E. end of the church. This work is by the well-known sculptor, Mr. Forsyth. The church of St. Thomas the Apostle was erected by Mrs. Jenkyns in 1857, in memory of her husband the late Dean of Wells. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans, have each a chapel. Near the town is a cemetery of eight acres. The cathedral church is dedicated to St. Andrew. Its form is that of a cross, extending from E. to W. about 371 feet, the transept measuring from N. to S. 135 feet; the tower is 165 feet high; there are about 150 statues of the size of life, and above 300 smaller ones. The present edifice was commenced about 1225 by Bishop Joceline de Welles; the two western towers were added about the end of the 14th century, that at the S. end by Bishop John de Harewell, and that on the N. by the executors of Bishop Bubwith, twenty years later. The Lady Chapel is one of the best specimens of ecclesiastical architecture in England. There are other chapels in different parts of the cathedral —one contains an ancient clock, formerly belonging to Glastonbury Abbey, having an astronomical dial and a moving train of knights in armour. The ancient font is preserved in the S. transept. The earliest date in the cathedral register is 1664. Within the walls lie King Ina, Bishops Joceline and Beckington, and there are many old monuments throughout the building. The chapter-house, erected by Bishop Marchia about the end of the 13th century, is an octangular building 480 feet in circumference, the roof being supported by a single central pillar; beneath this structure is a crypt. To the S. of the cathedral are the cloisters, which form a quadrangle, the sides measuring severally 160 feet. The episcopal palace, which is of the 14th century, stands near the southern side of the cathedral, and has embattled walls, a moat on either side, and a drawbridge. During the Commonwealth the palace suffered great damage, but has been repaired by various bishops since that period. To the N.W. of the cathedral stands the deanery (built by Bishop Gunthorpe about 1475), and beyond are twenty houses called the Vicar's College, or Close. King Henry VII. was entertained in the deanery in 1498, on the occasion of his march to suppress the rebellion of Perkin Warbeck. The see of Bath and Wells is in the province of Canterbury, and was held by Cardinal Wolsey, Archbishop Laud, and Bishop Ken. The diocese comprises the county of Somerset (except Bedminster), contains 460 benefices, and is divided into the archdeaconries of Wells, Bath, and Taunton. The chapter includes a dean, sub-dean, 4 canons, precentor, chancellor, treasurer, 3 archdeacons, 45 prebendaries, 4 minor canons, &c., with the patronage of 19 livings. Wells archdeaconry includes the deaneries of Axbridge, Carey, Frome, Ilchester, Merston, Poulet and Glaston jurisdiction, or about 210 benefices. Wells Theological College was founded in 1840 by the late Bishop Law, and the grammar school is supposed to have been founded by Bishop Joceline de Welles about 1240. There is a National school for both sexes, and also Barkham's, Hodges's, and Hickes's charity school, founded in 1654. There are numerous charities connected with the town, among which are Bishop Bubwith's almshouses, founded in 1437, for 24 persons; Bishop Still's, founded about the beginning of the 17th century, for 6 men; Walter Bricke's, founded in 1637, for 4 poor burgesses of the town; Henry Llewellyn's, founded in 1600, for 12 women; Archibald Harper's, for 5 wool-combers; Charles's, for 2 women; and Bishop Wille's, for 4 poor men. Joceline de Welles, Bishop of Bath and Wells; Hugh de Wells, Bishop of Lincoln (both active participators in the Barons' rebellion against King John), and Bishop Bull, of St. David's (1634—1709), were natives of this place. Saturday and Wednesday are market days, and a market for cattle is held on 4th January, 14th May, Whit-Tuesday, 6th July, 25th October, and 30th November. There is a monthly market for cheese, cattle, &c., also, on the first Saturday in each month.

WELLS-FORUM, a hund., co. Somerset, contains the city of Wells, and the pars. of Binegar, Cranmore West, Dinder, Evercreech, Litton, Priddy, Westbury, and Wookey; comprising 30,000 acres.

WELLS-NEXT-THE-SEA, a par. and seaport town in the hund. of North Greenhoe, co. Norfolk, 4½ miles N.W. of Walsingham, and 10 N. of Fakenham. It is a station on the Wells and Fakenham branch of the Great Eastern railway. This place is called in Domesday Book Guella. It is situated on a creek of the North Sea, which winds in a circuitous course for nearly 2 miles to the harbour, where the tide rises 21 feet. It was until recently much choked with sand, but has been improved. The quay, which was greatly dilapidated, has been rebuilt of Yorkshire freestone. There is good anchorage outside the harbour, in Wells Road, or Holkham Bay, in 3 fathoms water. A considerable coasting trade is carried on, and there are above 70 registered vessels of 3,100 tons, besides 20 fishing-boats, chiefly employed in the oyster and mussel fisheries. Ship-building is carried on, and there are breweries, malting-houses, rope-walks, machine-works, and several corn-mills. The population in 1851 was 3,651, and in 1861, 3,464, but of the town, 3,098. It is not incorporated, but is governed by commissioners appointed under a local Act. The streets are paved and lighted with gas, and many improvements have recently been effected. It contains a custom-house, gas-works, two branch banks, a public library, and theatre, and is a coastguard station. Petty sessions are held on the third Monday in the month, and courts leet and baron annually by the lord of the manor. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £870. The church is variously said to be dedicated to St. Nicholas, St. Peter, and All Saints. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Society of Friends have each a chapel. There are National and infant schools, built by the Countess of Leicester in 1838. The local charities produce about £200 per annum. The market, formerly on Saturday, has fallen into disuse. A fair is held on Shrove-Tuesday on the Butt Lands.

WELLWOOD ROW, a vil. in the par. of Muirkirk, co. Ayr, Scotland.

WELNETHAM. See WHELNETHAM, co. Suffolk.

WELNEY, a chplry. in the par. of Upwell, partly in the hund. of Clackclose, co. Norfolk, and partly in that of Wisbeach, Isle of Ely, co. Cambridge, 10 miles S.W. of Downham-Market. It is situated in the Bedford Level, on the river Welney.

WELSH BICKNOR. See BICKNOR, WELSH, co. Hereford, and the like for WELSH HAMPTON, WELSH NEWTON, &c.

WELSH BICKNOR. See BICKNOR, WELSH, co. Monmouth.

WELSHPOOL, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, having exclusive jurisdiction, but locally situated in the hunds. of Pool and Cawrse, co. Montgomery, 7½ miles N. of Montgomery, 15 from Oswestry, and 18 from Shrewsbury. It is a junction station of the Cambrian, Shrewsbury, and Welshpool railway where the Shrewsbury branch turns off. It is in reality, though not in name, the capital of Montgomeryshire, containing the assize and sessions courts for the county and the militia head-quarters. Its original appellation was Trallum, and it was called by the English Welshpool, to distinguish it from Poole in Dorsetshire. The par. is divided into Upper, Middle, and Lower, and includes Welsh Town, Pool, Llanerchydol, and 7 other tnshps. The limits of the municipal borough extend beyond those of the parish and parliamentary borough, to the distance of from 4 to 6 miles all around the town, the population in 1861 being respectively 7,304, 5,004, 4,844, having more than doubled since the commencement of the present century, when that of the parish was 2,295. It returned members to parliament from the reign of Henry VIII. to 1728, when it was disfranchised, but the privilege was partially restored by the Reform Act of 1832, which made it a contributory borough to Montgomery. It was first chartered by James II., and under the Municipal Reform Act is now governed by a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 councillors, with the style of "burgesses and bailiffs of the borough of Poole." Here is Castell Côch, or Powis Castle, founded in 1109 by Cadwgan ap Bleddyr, and completed by subsequent princes of Powis-land. Having been dismantled by Llywelyn ap Jorwerth, it was again restored by Hawys, daughter of Owain ap Grufydd, under English protection, who married Sir John de Charlton, created Baron Powis and Valectus Domini Regis. In their posterity the barony and estates continued for several generations, but being conveyed by marriage to the family of Grey, of Hetton, were sold in the 29th year of Elizabeth to Sir Edward Herbert, second son of William, Earl of Pembroke, in the possession of whose descendants it still remains. The castle has been much altered and modernised, but part of the walls are said to be of the 13th century. It occupies a situation on the summit of a rock which has been scarped so as to form a wall, the top serving as a terrace. From this point a view is obtained of the vales of Montgomery and Shrewsbury, with the Severn below, and from Powis Park are visible the summits of Plinlimmon, Cader Idris, Arenig, Aranmowddy, and Moel-y-golfa. In a detached building more recent than the castle are 60 or 70 paintings and portraits by the first masters, also an ancient painting in fresco brought from Pompeii, and a portrait of Lord Clive by Dance. The grounds, laid out by Capability Brown, still retain the parallel terraces and squared slopes, but the ancient waterworks and clipped shrubs are removed. The park extends to the town, and by the generosity of the noble owner is free to everybody to enter by a gateway which opens into the main street. The houses of the town are well built and uniform. The streets are well paved and lighted with gas. There are the county hall, with a colonnade and pilasters of stone in front, and the market-house beneath, where the Eisteddfod was held in 1825; a savings-bank, dispensary, two branch banks, and gasworks. There are also malthouses, tanneries, breweries, and factories for Welsh flannel, which is manufactured here. The Severn is navigable for small barges as far as Pool Quay, three miles from the town, and upwards of 200 miles from its confluence with the Bristol Channel. A canal joins that of Ellesmere near Hordley, and extends in the opposite direction to Newtown. A little to the N.E. of the town rises abruptly from the vale the rock of Moel-y-golfa, about 1,300 feet in height, and the Breidden, with an obelisk to Admiral Rodney on the summit. Two miles to the N.E. on the opposite bank of the Severn is Buttington, where the Danes under Hesten were defeated by King Alfred in 894, and at Pool Quay was Strata Marcella Abbey. Welshpool is the seat of a new County Court, but belongs to the Montgomery superintendent registry district. Bishop Morgan, who translated the Bible into Welsh, was once vicar. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £300, in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church, originally dedicated to St. Cynfelyn, but afterwards to St. Mary, was nearly rebuilt in 1774. It is placed at the bottom of a hill, the cemetery being nearly equal in height to that of the building, and the roof of the chancel is said to have been brought from the abbey of Strata Marcella. Christ Church, erected to commemorate the coming of age of Lord Clive, is on an eminence at the W. of the town, and is a donative in the gift of the Earl of Powis, with an endowment of £100. One of the most interesting objects is the sacramental chalice of pure gold, val. £170, presented in 1662 to St. Mary's church by Thomas Davies, Governor of the English settlements on the Guinea coast. There are 5 Dissenting chapels, a Middle school, and National, infant, and free schools with a small endowment, also a British school. The local charities produce about £180 per annum, chiefly from the rents of the burgesses' lands. Market day for provisions is on Monday. Fairs are held on the second Monday every month for horses, cattle, and sheep, &c.; first Monday after 20th September for cheese and butter, and Monday before Christmas for cattle.

WELSTONE, a tnshp. in the par. of Holywell, co. Flint, 2 miles from Holywell, and 10 E. of St. Asaph.

WELTON, a par. and large vil. in the wap. of Lawress, co. Lincoln, 6 miles N.E. of Lincoln. It includes the hmlt. of Ryland. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £340, in the patron. of the prebendaries of Welton. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Primitive and Reformed Methodists have chapels. There are church schools for boys and girls. This parish has the privilege of sending 11 boys to Christ's Hospital at Lincoln. The parochial charities produce about £43 per annum, of which £10 are for a lecture in the church every Sunday evening. Earl Brownlow is lord of the manor.

WELTON, a par. in the hund. of Fawsley, co. Northampton, 2 miles N.E. of Daventry. It has a station at Crick, on the Birmingham section of the London and North Western railway. The village is situated on the ancient Watling Street, at the junction of the Grand Junction and Union canals, the former of which passes through a tunnel 1½ mile in length. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £200, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew, or to St. Martin. The register commences in 1578. There is a Baptist chapel, and National and Sunday schools. R. T. Clarke, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WELTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Ovingham, co. Northumberland, 9 miles N.E. of Hexham. It has an ancient tower near the line of the Roman wall, and was once the residence of King Oswy, and the place where the Kings Penda and Sigebert received the rites of baptism from Finan, Bishop of Lindisfarne.

WELTON, a tythg. in the par. of Midsomer Norton, co. Somerset, 7 miles S.W. of Bath.

WELTON, a par. in the wap. of Howdenshire, East Riding co. York, 3 miles S.E. of South Cave, and 1¼ mile W. of Ferriby railway station. It is situated near the river Humber, and contains the chplry. of Melton. Bricks and tiles are made. The soil is wold and clay, upon a subsoil of chalk and clay. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. with the cur. of Melton, £500, in the patron. of the crown. The church of St. Helen is said to have been built in the reign of William Rufus. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there is a National school. The charities produce £15 per annum.

WELTON-IN-THE-MARSH, a par. in the Wold div. of Candleshoe wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 6 miles N.E. of Spilsby, and 2 N. of the Burgh railway station on the East Lincolnshire line, which passes through the parish. It contains the hmlt. of Boothby. The burning of lime is carried on. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £150. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, was rebuilt in 1792. The Independents and Wesleyans have each a chapel. A large tumulus, called Castle Hill, is situated in this parish. Lord Willoughby d'Eresby is lord of the manor. A pleasure fair is held on old Lady Day.

WELTON-LE-WOLD, a par. in the Wold div. of the hund. of Louth-Eske, parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 3½ miles W. of Louth railway station and navigation. The village is situated on the Wolds. The soil is loam and chalk. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £600, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, was enlarged in 1838, and restored in 1850. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National schools for this and the adjoining parishes of North and South Elkington, built in 1860. The Rev. W. Smyth and the Right Hon. C. T. D'Eyncourt are lords of the manor.

WELWICK, a par. in the S. div. of Holderness wap., East Riding co. York, 2 miles S.E. of Patrington. The village is situated about 1½ mile from the mouth of the river Humber. The par. includes the hmlts. of Weeton and Holland, and the homesteads of Welwick, Thorpe, and Ploughlands. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £105. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains the remains of a monument said to have been removed from Burstall Abbey, and several shields of arms, including those of Edward the Confessor. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel, but the meeting-house of the Society of Friends is now converted into a school. The parochial charities produce about £2 per annum.

WELWYN, a par. and small town in the hund. of Broadwater, co. Herts, 5 miles N. of Hatfield, 7 W. of Hertford, and 1½ mile W. of the Welwyn station of the Great Northern railway. It is situated in a valley near the river Maran, or Mimeran, across which the railway is carried by a viaduct of 42 arches, 97 feet high and 30 broad. The par. includes, besides the town of its own name, the hmlts. of Woolmer Green and Harmer Green. The town consists of one principal street, with a smaller one leading to Stevenage. It contains assembly-rooms, union poor-house, and a literary institution, with reading room and library, at the "White Hart" hotel. The streets have recently been lighted with gas. The population in 1851 was 1,557, and in 1861, 1,612. The manufacture of boots and shoes has been introduced, and there is a fellmonger and woolstapler. The Poor-law Union comprises 4 parishes or townships. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £665, in the gift of All Souls' College, Oxford. The church of St. Mary contains the tomb of Dr. Young, author of "Night Thoughts," who died rector in 1766, leaving the interest of £1,500 for clothing and educating 16 boys. There are National, infant, and endowed free schools. The principal seats are Danesbury and Frythe. The local charities produce about £90 per annum.

WEM, a div. of North Bradford hund., co. Salop, contains the pars. of Moreton Corbet and Shawbury, and parts of Hodnet and Wem, comprising 22,090 acres.

WEM, a par., post and market town, partly in the hund. of Pimhill, but chiefly in that of North Bradford, co. Salop, 10 miles N.E. of Shrewsbury, and 8 N.E. of Baschurch. It is a station on the Crewe and Shrewsbury branch of the London and North-Western railway. The par. comprises, besides the town of Wem, the chplries. of Edstaston and Newtown, and the tnshps. of Aston, Cotton, Horton, Lacon, Lowe-with-Ditches, Northwood, Sleap, Soulton, Tilley, Trench, and Wolverley. The town, which is a polling place for the county, is situated on the northern bank of the river Roden, near a branch of the Ellesmere canal, and on the road from Shrewsbury to Chester. It consists principally of one thoroughfare called the High-street. It contains a townhall, rebuilt in 1848, market-house, union poor-house, and branch of the National and Provincial Bank. The population of the parish in 1851 was 3,747, and in 1861, 3,802. There are tanyards, malting-houses, and a watermill. It is governed by two bailiffs, with other officers, annually appointed at the courts leet of the lord of the manor, which at the time of the Domesday survey belonged to William Pandulph, and afterwards came to the Howards and Judge Jeffreys, on whom it conferred the title of baron in the reign of James II. The county court is held in the townhall monthly, and petty sessions fortnightly. The Poor-law Union comprises 12 parishes, and the guardians meet once a fortnight at the union workhouse. The living is a rect.,* val. £2,000. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. Its body was rebuilt after the fire of 1677, but the tower is ancient. There are also churches at Edstaston and Newtown, the former dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, with three Norman doorways and a painted memorial window. The Baptists, Presbyterians, and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel. The free grammar school, founded and endowed in 1650 by Sir Thomas Adams, was rebuilt in 1776. It has an income of about £350, with two exhibitions to the universities. There are besides National, British, and infant schools. An extra-mural cemetery has been formed with a chapel. Wycherley, the dramatist, and Ireland, author of "Hogarth Illustrated," were born at Clive, in this parish. Market day is on Thursday. Fairs are held on the first Thursdays in March, June, and August, the last Thursday in September, and on the 6th May for linen, 29th June for cattle, and 22nd November for pigs.

WEMBDON, a par. in the hund. of North Petherton, co. Somerset, 1½ mile N.W. of Bridgwater, within which borough it is situated. The parish is bounded on the E. by the navigable river Parret, and on the S. by the road from Bridgwater to Dunster. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £615. The church is dedicated to St. George. The local charities produce about £6 per annum. There is a village school.

WEMBLY, a hmlt. in the par. of Harrow-on-the-Hill, co. Middlesex, 9 miles N.W. of St. Paul's, London. It is situated on the river Brent, near the Sudbury station of the London and North-Western railway, by whom the church was built. The manor formerly belonged to the priory of Kilburn. For ecclesiastical purposes it forms a district parish with Sudbury.

WEMBURY, a par. in the hund. of Plympton, co. Devon, 6 miles S.E. of Plymouth, and 5 S.W. of Plympton-Earls. It is bounded on the S. and W. by the English Channel, and on the E. by the river Yealm. It anciently belonged to Plympton Priory, and includes the hmlt. of Knighton. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £90, in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Windsor. The church, dedicated to St. Werburgh, is situated on the brow of a hill overlooking the sea. It contains tombs of the Heles and Calmadys of Langdon. There is an almshouse for 10 poor people, founded and endowed in 1625 by Sir W. Hele, and a village school. E. R. P. Bastard, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WEMBWORTHY, a par. in the hund. of North Tawton, co. Devon, 4 miles S.W. of Chulmleigh, 12 N.W. of Crediton, and 1½ mile S.W. of the Eggesford station on the North Devon railway. The village is situated in the vale of the river Taw. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £160. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The Earl of Portsmouth is lord of the manor, and resides at Eggesford House.

WEMERGILL, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Lunedale and par. of Ronaldkirk, North Riding co. York, 10 miles N.W. of Barnard Castle. It is situated near the Lunedale Beck, a branch of the river Tees.

WEMYSS, a par. in the district of Kirkcaldy, co. Fife, Scotland. It comprises the vils. of East Wemyss, West Wemyss, Buckhaven, and Methill, on the coast, also the inland vils. of Kirkland, East Coaltown and West Coaltown. It extends in length about 5¾ miles from S.W. to N.E., with an extreme breadth of about 2 miles, and is bounded along the S.E. and the S. by the Frith of Forth, and on other sides by the pars. of Dysart, Markinch, Kennoway, and Scoonie. It is a burgh of barony, and a subport to Kirkcaldy. The coast, which is bold and rocky, extends a considerable length into the sea, and is perforated with many caves. One of these caves extends 200 feet in length, and in another James IV. was entertained by the gipsies. The rocks are chiefly of the carboniferous series, including excellent coal in 12 seams about 89½ feet in thickness; a shining parret coal, which is cut into tables, looking-glass frames, &c.; and beds of ironstone, which are worked. Fishing is carried on to some extent on the coast. The village is about 3 miles N.E. of Dysart. Many of the inhabitants are employed in linen weaving and in the collieries. This par. is in the presb. of Kirkcaldy and synod of Fife. The stipend of the minister is about £269. The parish church is situated at East Wemyss, and at the same place is a Free church. At Buckhaven are an United Presbyterian Church and a public library. There are two chapels-of-ease, respectively situated at Methill and West Wemyss, at which latter place is also a public library. There are a parochial school and 5 non-parochial schools. The principal seat is Wemyss Castle, where Queen Mary first met Darnley. It is at a short distance E. of West Wemyss, on a cliff 35 feet above the sea, and near it are the ruins of Macduff's castle.

WEMYSS BAY, a haven in the Frith of Clyde, co. Renfrew, Scotland, 6 miles S.W. of Greenock. It is the terminus of the Glasgow, Greenock, and Wemyss Bay branch of the Caledonian railway.

WEMYSS, EAST, a vil. in the par. of Wemyss, co. Fife, Scotland, 1½ mile N.E. of West Wemyss, and 1 S.W. of Buckhaven. It has long been a seat of the linen trade.

WEMYSS, WEST, a vil. and burgh of barony in the par. of Wemyss, co. Fife, Scotland, 1½ mile S.W. of East Wemyss, and 2 N.E. of Dysart. It has an excellent harbour, much used by vessels employed in the coal trade. Its government is invested in two bailies, a treasurer, and a number of councillors.

WEN, a hmlt. in the par. of Llansawel, co. Carmarthen, 9 miles N. of Llandilo-Fawr.

WENDENS AMBO, a par. in the hund. of Uttlesford, co. Essex, 2 miles S.W. of Saffron Walden, and 1½ mile N.W. of Newport. It has a station at Audley End, on the Great Eastern railway. It is situated near the source of the Grantor, a feeder of the river Cam, and includes the hmlts. of Great and Little Wenden, which, prior to 1662, formed separate parishes. At Audley End is a railway hotel, built by Lord Braybrooke. The living is a vic.* with the rect. of Little Wenden united, in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £220. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a carved oak screen and a brass of 1420. The parochial register dates from 1780. The Independents have a chapel. The local charities produce about £6 per annum.

WENDLEBURY, a par. in the hund. of Ploughley, co. Oxford, 2½ miles S.W. of Bicester. It is situated on the ancient Akeman Street, near the river Ray. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £220, in the patron. of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, was rebuilt in 1761, with the exception of the tower, which is ancient. There is a village school, and a small theological library. The parochial charities produce about £6 per annum.

WENDLING, a par. in the hund. of Launditch, co. Norfolk, 4 miles W. of East Dereham. The village is situated on the road from Swaffham to East Dereham. It had formerly an abbey for Præmonstratensian canons, founded in the 13th century by William de Wendling, and which was suppressed by a bull of Pope Clement, and given in 1528 to Cardinal Wolsey towards the foundation of his new colleges, when its revenues amounted to £55 18*s.* 4*d.* The living is a perpet. cur. united to that of Longham, in the dioc. of Norwich, joint val. £60. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The parochial charities produce about £21 per annum.

WENDON-LOFTS, a par. in the hund. of Uttlesford, co. Essex, 5 miles W. of Saffron-Walden, and 3 N.W. of Wendens Ambo. The village is situated in an open country, watered by the Grantor, a feeder of the Cam. The living is a rect.* with the vic. of Elmdon annexed, in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £470. The church, dedicated to St. Dunstan, contains a brass of W. Lucas and family of the 15th century, and several monumental inscriptions. There is also a small chapel of ease, recently erected by the Rev. R. Wilkes.

WENDOVER, a par., market-town, and decayed borough, in the hund. of Aylesbury, co. Bucks, 5 miles from Aylesbury, 21 S.E. of Buckingham, and 7 from Tring station on the North-Western railway. It is situated at the foot of the Chiltern hills, near the entrance to the Vale of Aylesbury, and includes, besides the town of its own name, Wendover, Dean Foreign, and Lee Common. It was given by Henry II. to Faramus de Boulogne, and was subsequently held by Alice Perrers, a favourite of Edward III., the Hollands, Earls of Kent, Edward Duke of York, the royal family, and the Knollys, who sold it in 1660 to the Hampdens, of whom was John Hampden the patriot, who sat for the borough in five successive parliaments; the manor continued in their possession until the decease of the late lord, when it became the property of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, who sold it to the Smiths of Walton, to whom the manor now belongs, and who represented it in parliament until the borough was disfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832. A branch of the Grand Junction canal extends to the town, and passes through a reservoir in the neighbourhood, extending over 70 acres. The town is lighted with gas. Lace and straw plait are made. Petty sessions are held fortnightly, and courts leet and baron occasionally. It contributes to Aylesbury in returning two members to parliament. The population in 1861 was 1,932. The soil is principally clay and chalk, and the greater part of the land arable. In the immediate vicinity are the hills of Boddington, Backham, and Coombe, commanding views, which embrace St. Paul's cathedral, London, 35 miles distant. It gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry of Berks and dioc. of Oxford. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £270, with 80 acres of glebe, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a font presented by Robert Fox, and several tablets to the Stace family. The old chapel of St. John was taken down about a quarter of a century ago to afford a site for the infant school. There are chapels for Independents and general Baptists, and National schools partially endowed by William Hill in 1723, and two infant schools. The parochial charities, including Hill's bequest, produce about £250 per annum. Chequers, Sir R. G. Russell, Bishop of Wendover, and Roger de Wendover, the historian, were born here. Market day is on Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 13th May and 2nd October.

WENDRON, a par. in the W. div. of Kerrier hund., co. Cornwall. It is situated in a rich mineral district, and comprises the borough and market town of Helston.

WENDY, a par. in the hund. of Armingford, co. Cambridge, 6 miles N.W. of Royston, its post town and railway station, and 11 S.W. of Cambridge. The village is situated near the river Rhea. It is supplied with water by artesian wells. The soil is loamy. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. with Shingay annexed, £200. The school, founded and endowed by Thomas Windsor in 1828, was rebuilt in 1858. The parochial charities produce about £35 per annum.

WENHAM, GREAT and LITTLE, two pars. in the incorporation and hund. of Samford, co. Suffolk, 4½ miles S.E. of Hadleigh, and 8 S.W. of Ipswich. At Little Wenham the old seat of the Brewes family, which affords the earliest example of the use of Flemish brick extant, is now converted into a granary. The living of Great Wenham is a rect.,* val. £250, in the patron. of the Bishop of Norwich, and that of Little Wenham, also a rect., consolidated with that of Capel St. Mary. The church of the former parish, dedicated to St. John, has a brass, double canopied, and the latter, an ancient structure of the 13th century, contains memorials of the Brewes family. The registers date respectively from 1643 and 1558.

WENHASTON, a par. in the hund. of Blything, co. Suffolk, 1½ mile S.E. of Halesworth. It comprises the hmlt. of Mells, and is bounded on the N.E. by the navigable river Blythe. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £150. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains monuments to the Leman family, who formerly had a seat here. There is a Wesleyan chapel, and a school partially endowed. The charities produce about £75 per annum, including £55 from town estate, now applied to the church.

WENLOCK BOROUGH, a lib. in co. Salop, contains the pars. of Barrow, Benthall, Broseley, Prior's Ditton, Monk Hopton, Hughley, Linley, Madeley, Posenhall, Little Wenlock, Much Wenlock, and Willey, comprising 30,540 acres. The other liberties, comprising Badger, Beckbery, Deuxhill, Eaton, and Stoke St. Milborough, are now parts of Brimstree, Munslow, and Stottesden hunds., but are included in the parliamentary borough of Wenlock.

WENLOCK, LITTLE, a par. in the Wenlock Borough, co. Salop, 5 miles N.E. of Much Wenlock, and 3 S. of Wellington railway station. The village is situated under the Wrekin. There are collieries, iron-mines, and extensive limestone quarries. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £550. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

WENLOCK, MUCH, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, locally in the franchise of Wenlock Borough, co. Salop, 12 miles S.E. of Shrewsbury, and 5 from Ironbridge. It has a station on the Severn Valley branch of the Great Western railway. It is supposed to have been the site of the British station Llan Meilein. In 680 the Saxon princess Milburga, daughter of King Merwald, built a monastery here, which, having been several times destroyed by the Danes, was refounded in 1080 by Roger Earl Warine as a Cluniac abbey. The extensive ruins include parts of the nave, S. transept and choir of the church, and remains of the lady-chapel, cloisters, Norman chapter-house, and the prior's lodge. At the Dissolution its revenues were valued at £401, and the site given to the Lawleys, from whom it came through the Berties and Gages to the Wynns, from whom it was purchased by J. Milnes Gaskell, Esq., M.P. and lord of the manor for the tnshp. of Wenlock. The town is situated on the road from Shrewsbury to Bridgnorth, under an extensive mountainous ridge of limestone rock, called Wenlock Edge. It contains the guildhall, an antique structure supported on oak pillars, and fitted with carved oak furniture, restored in 1848 at a cost of £1,000; the corn exchange, with the agricultural library and reading-room, erected in 1852 at a cost of £1,400; a savings-bank, commercial bank open for business on Mondays and Thursdays, excise office, a museum, farmers' club, police station, and timbered market house. The trade of the town is chiefly in agricultural produce, and business is done in malting, tanning, lime-burning, &c. The population of the town is about 1,500. It was incorporated by Edward IV., and under the Municipal Act is the head of an incorporation union composed of Broseley, Dawley, Madeley, and Much Wenlock, which are divided into three wards and governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, with the style of "burgesses of the borough of Wenlock." The municipal revenue is about £600. The borough has returned two members to parliament from the reign of Edward IV. The borough quarter sessions are held at the guildhall before the recorder, and petty sessions fortnightly at Wenlock, Madeley, and Broseley alternately. There is also a court of record for the borough, and a court-leet for the manor. Races take place in the last week of July, on an oval course of a mile, near the town. Wenlock gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry of Salop and dioc. of Hereford. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £380. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was restored in 1853. There is a chapel-of-ease at Burton. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The parochial charities produce about £40 per annum, including £15, the endowment of Southern's school. There are National and infant schools, erected in 1848. The Lawleys of Escrick Park, Yorkshire, have estates in the parish, and take the title of baron from this place. Market day is on Monday. Fairs are held on the second Monday in March, 12th May, 5th July for sheep, 17th October, and 4th December for cattle, sheep, pigs, &c.

WENNINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Chafford, co. Essex, 6 miles S.E. of Romford, and 2 from the Rainham station of the Tilbury and Southend branch of the Great Eastern railway. It is situated near the river Thames, along the banks of which extends a considerable tract of marsh land. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £400, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

WENNINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Melling, co. Lancaster, 6 miles S.E. of Kirkby-Lonsdale. It is a station on the Leeds, Settle, and Lancaster branch of the Midland railway. It is situated on the Wenning Brook which joins the river Lune at Tarleton.

WENNINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Ripton Abbots co. Hunts, 5 miles N. of Huntingdon.

WENN, ST. a par. in the E. div. of Pyder hund., co Cornwall, 4 miles N.E. of St. Columb-Major. It is mentioned in Domesday survey as San Wena. The par., which is intersected in the northern part by the river Camel, includes the vil. of Treganetha. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £130. The church, dedicated to St. Wenn, was rebuilt in 1830, with the exception of the tower, which has been damaged by lightning. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there are National and Sunday schools. Fairs are held on the 25th April and 1st August for cattle.

WENSEY, a par. in the wap. of West Hang, North Riding co. York, 3 miles N.W. of Middleham, and 1 mile S.W. of Leyburn. The parish is situated in Wensleydale, on the N. bank of the river Ure or Yore, here crossed by an ancient bridge. It includes the chplries. of Bolton Castle and Redmire, with the tnshps. of Leyburn, Wensley, and Preston-under-Scar. The village was formerly a market town, but was devastated by the plague, from the effects of which it never recovered. In this parish are valuable lead mines belonging to Lord Bolton, who resides at Bolton Hall, a large stone mansion near the old castle. The surface is part moorland, but a large proportion is rich grazing land on a subsoil of limestone. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £1,400. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, contains an old font, a brass of a priest bearing date 1360, and a portion of the parclose of the Scrope chantry brought from St. Agatha's Abbey, now used as a pew by the Bolton family, to whom there are several monuments, also one to the Hon. T. P. O. Powlett and Peter Goldsmith, M.D. The register dates from 1538. The Wesleyans have several chapels, and there are National, infant, and Sunday schools. The parochial charities produce about £70 per annum. There are remains of Middleham and Bolton Castles, and Jervaulx Abbey. Lord Bolton is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WENSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Darley, co. Derby, 2 miles N.E. of Winster. It is situated on the river Derwent, and is joined with Snitterton.

WENSLEY-FOLD, a tnshp. in the par. of Blackburn, co. Lancaster, 2 miles N. of Blackburn. It is bounded on the S. by the river Derwent.

WENTNOR, a par. in the hund. of Purslow, co. Salop, 5 miles N.E. of Bishop's-Castle. The village is situated on the river Onny, under Long Mynd Hill. The par. contains the hmlts. of Adston, Home, Kinnerton, and Medlicott, and the Bog lead mines, which are productive. There is a woollen manufactory. The living is a rect.,* val. £200, in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Christ Church, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a chapel for the Independents, and a school partially endowed.

WENTWOOD FOREST, a demesne, co. Monmouth, 5 miles S.E. of Usk, a tract belonging to the Duke of Beaufort, whose seat is Wentwood Lodge. The Llangibby hounds meet here.

WENTWORTH, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. of Wath-on-Dearne, West Riding co. York, 5 miles N.W. of Rotherham, 8 N. of Sheffield, and 2 E. of Chappel Town station on the South Yorkshire railway. The chplry. includes part of the ecclesiastical district of Thorpe Hesley, and the hmlts. of Barrow, Barley Hall, and Hoodhill. The population are chiefly employed in tillage and in the collieries, which belong to Earl Fitzwilliam, whose seat, Wentworth Woodhouse, is situated about a mile E. of the village; it contains a banqueting hall 60 feet by 40, and a picture gallery 130 feet long, with a collection of paintings and ancient marbles. In the grounds are the Keppel pillar and the Grecian mausoleum, 90 feet high, erected in 1788 by the second Earl Fitzwilliam, in honour of his uncle the Marquis of Rockingham, with a statue by Nollekens and inscription by Burke. Surrounding it is a deer park of 1,500 acres. In the village is a mechanics' institute, library, and savings-bank. The living is a perpet. cur., val. £125. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been recently enlarged, at the cost of Earl Fitzwilliam. The interior contains monuments to the Wentworth family. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there are National and other schools. The local charities produce about £135 per annum, including the endowments of the free school and almshouses, founded in 1697, pursuant to the will of William Wentworth, Earl of Strafford. Earl Fitzwilliam is lord of the manor.

WENTWORTH, or WINGFORD, a par. in the hund. of South Witchford and Isle of Ely, co. Cambridge, 4 miles S.W. of Ely. The village is situated on the road to St. Ives. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £300, in the patron. of the dean, who is rector of the parish. The register dates from 1700. There is a school supported by the dean.

WEOBLY, a par. and small market town in the hund. of Stretford, co. Hereford, 11 miles N.W. of Hereford, and 8 S.W. of Leominster. It is situated in a district abounding in hop-grounds and orchards, near the main roads from Kington to Hereford and Leominster. It had formerly a castle, which was taken by Stephen from the Empress Matilda in 1141, and was surprised by the Welsh in 1207. It belonged to the Lacy, Verdon, and Devereux families, and returned two members to parliament occasionally from the reign of Edward I. till disfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832. It consists of two principal streets, containing a courthouse, police station, and union poorhouse. The population of the parish in 1851 was 972, and in 1861, 849. The trade is chiefly in agricultural produce and malting, and there are quarries of good building stone. It was formerly incorporated, and is under the charge of two constables, annually chosen at the manorial court held in October by the Marquis of Bath, who is lord of the manor. Petty sessions for the hundred are held at the court-house fortnightly on Monday. The Poor-law Union, which comprises 25 parishes, is divided into two districts, Weobly and Dilwyn. The poor-law guardians meet every alternate Monday. Weobly gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and bishopric of Hereford. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £236, in the patron. of the Bishop of Worcester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an old font and a marble bust of Colonel J. Birch, who distinguished himself in the parliamentary wars of Charles I. There are chapels belonging to the Roman Catholics and Primitive Methodists; the former, built in 1834, is dedicated to St. Thomas of Hereford. There are National schools in Broad-street, endowed with £22 per annum, left by William Crowther in 1655 for maintenance of a grammar school, which, having fallen into decay, has been removed. About a mile S. of the town is Garnstone Castle, the seat of the Rev. John Birch Peploe. The market was on Thursday, but is now nearly obsolete. A fair is held on 8th May for cattle, pleasure, and the hiring of servants.

WEONARD, ST., a par. in the lower div. of Wormelow hund., co. Hereford, 7 miles N.W. of Ross, and 6 N. of Monmouth. The village is situated between the roads from Hereford to Monmouth and Ross to Abergavenny. It includes the hmlt. of Broad Oak. The soil is sand and loam, on a subsoil of rock. The living is a cur. annexed to Llangarron. The church is dedicated to St. Weonard. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National and free schools; the latter endowed with £20 per annum. Sir H. Hoskins, Bart., is lord of the manor.

WESTBURY, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, forming the hund. of Westbury, co. Wilts, 25 miles N.W. of Salisbury, and 98 S.W. from London by road, or 109¾ by the Wilts and Somerset railway, being the junction station of the Salisbury and Weymouth branches. It is supposed to have been a British settlement, and to occupy the site of the Roman station Verlucio, now called Bratton Castle. It was the scene of an engagement between Alfred the Great and the Danes in 890, to commemorate which, according to tradition, there is a figure of a horse cut in the chalk slope of Bratton Hill, which, being annually scoured by the parishioners, can be distinctly seen for many miles. The parish, which is situated under Salisbury Plain, comprises the chplry. of Dilton, the ecclesiastical districts of Dilton Marsh, Bratton, St. James, and Heywood, with the hmlts. of Chalford Hawkeridge, Westbury Leigh, and Brumbridge. The surface is hilly, rising to the height of 775 feet above the sea at Westbury Down. The manor, formerly held by the Mauduits, Seymours, Mountjoys, and Berties, now belongs to Sir Massey Lopez, Bart., of Westbury House, and M.P. for the borough. Iron ore has recently been discovered at Ham near the railway station, and iron works have been erected. The town consists of one long street, irregularly built, branching off towards Frome, Warminster, Trowbridge, and East Lavington. It is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water from springs which rise in various parts of the parish. The principal public buildings are the town-hall and market-house, erected in 1815 at the expense of the late Sir M. Lopes, Bart., Union poorhouse, savings-bank, branch of North Wilts Bank, Athenæum, post-office, and railway station. Its trade is chiefly in fancy cloths, and has recently much increased; and a large business is done in malting; there are two brick and tile works. The population of the parish in 1861 was 6,495, but of the township 5,751. It was incorporated by charter of Edward I., confirmed by Henry IV., the municipal corporation consisting of a mayor, recorder, 12 aldermen and burgesses, but the mayor exercises no magisterial authority. It had also a court of requests alternately with Warminster and Trowbridge, now merged in the county court. The parliamentary borough, which is co-extensive with the parish, returned two members to parliament from the reign of Henry VI. till the passing of the Reform Act of 1832, since which time it has returned one only. The Poor-law Union of Westbury and Whorwelsdown contains 10 parishes or places. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £390, with the chplry. of Dilton annexed, in the patron. of the bishop. The mother church of All Saints was built in the later Perpendicular style, and is now undergoing restoration. The interior contains several monuments and tombs of William de Westbury, one of the puisne judges of the Common Pleas, Governor Phippe, and James Ley, Earl of Marlborough. There are, besides several district churches, chapels for Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans. An extramural cemetery has recently been formed on the Bratton road, with chapels for Churchmen and Dissenters. There are National, infant, and free schools. The parochial charities produce about £190 per annum. Many Roman coins have been found. The market, now merely nominal, is on Tuesday for pigs only. Fairs are held on the first Friday in Lent, and Whit-Monday for pedlery, and on Easter-Monday and 24th September for horses, cattle, and cheese, but the principal fair is held on Westbury-Hill Down on the first Monday in September, chiefly for sheep.

WESTBURY, a hmlt. in the par. of Bassingthorpe, wap. of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 3½ miles N.W. of Corby. The Roman Catholics have a chapel.

WESTBURY-ON-SEVERN, a par. in the hund. of Westbury and Duchy of Lancaster, co. Gloucester, 2 miles N.E. of Newnham. The village is situated on the river Severn, which is here crossed by a ferry to Framlode. The par. includes the hmlt. of Rodley, and is the head of a Poor-law Union comprising 14 parishes, and the seat of a superintendent registry. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £270, in the patron. of the vicars-choral of Hereford Cathedral. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. There is a chapel for Wesleyans and Young's school, with a small endowment. The parochial charities produce about £40 per annum.

WESTBURY-UPON-TRYM, a par., tnshp., and vil., partly in the lower div. of Henbury hund., co. Gloucester, and partly in the co. of the city of Bristol, 3½ miles N.W. of Bristol. It is situated on the N. bank of the Severn, and includes the hmlts. of Ridland, Stoke Bishop, and Shirehampton, the last now forming a separate ecclesiastical district. Cotham stone is obtained, and limestone and lead ore abound. The population has increased from 6,728 in 1851, to 8,329 in 1861. A monastery was founded here in the 9th century, which subsequently was refounded as a cell to Worcester Priory, and in 1289 became a college for a dean and canons. Its revenue at the Dissolution was estimated at £232 14*s., and the house, which remained till the reign of Charles I., was burned by Prince Rupert to prevent its falling into the power of the parliament. The principal seats are Westbury College, including the ruins of the old monastery, and Redland Court. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £630. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, and was formerly collegiate; the chancel was built by Bishop Carpenter in the 15th century. There is a district church at Shirehampton, and a chapel-of-ease at Redland. The Baptists and Wesleyans have chapels, and there are National and other schools. The parochial charities produce about £200 per annum. About 1½ mile N.E. of the village is a cavern called Pen Park Hole. Wickliffe, Prebendary of Aust, and Bishop Carpenter were born here.

WESTERHAM, a par. and ancient market town in the hund. of the same name, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. Kent, 6 miles W. of Sevenoaks, 21 W. of Maidstone, and 21 S.E. of London. The town is situated on a declivity near the source of the river Derwent, and near the western border of the county. It has a town-hall, literary institute, and reading-room. The population of the parish in 1861 was 2,196, and of the town, 1,651. The par., which includes the chplry. of Crockham Hill or Cockham, stretches from the summit of the chalk ridge, which separates it from Cudham on the N., to the sand hills of the Weald in the S. Hops are extensively cultivated. Two landslips took place here in the green sandstone rock—the first in 1596, at Oakham Hill, when 9 acres of land, with trees and fences, continued in motion for eleven days; and the latter in 1756, at Toy's Hill, when 2½ acres were moved, some parts sinking into pits, and others rising into hills. The manor was given by Edward I. to the Abbot of Westminster, who obtained from Edward III. the grant of a market, and subsequently came to the Greshams and Wardes of Squerryes. The present proprietor of this seat, which is of the 16th century, and contains a collection of paintings and family portraits, is Vice-Admiral Charles Warde, K.H. Fronting the S.W. entrance is a lake, and in the park is a pillar to General Wolfe, the hero of Quebec, who was born at the vicarage in this parish in 1727. Fryth, the martyr, burnt in 1533, and Dr. Benjamin Hoadly, Bishop of Winchester, born in 1676, were also natives. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £450. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has recently been restored, and contains four brasses, the earliest bearing date 1531, and a cenotaph to General Wolfe. The parochial register dates from 1559. There is also the district church of the Holy Trinity at Crockham Hill, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £120. The Independents have a chapel, and there are National schools in connection with both churches. The parochial charities produce about £32 per annum. Wednesday is market-day, and fairs are held on 3rd May.

WESTERKIRK, a par. in the district of Eskdale, co. Dumfries, Scotland. It extends 10 miles in length from S. to N., with an extreme breadth of 6½ miles; and it is bounded on the N. by Roxburghshire, and on the other sides by the pars. of Ewes, Langholm, Tundergarth, Hutton and Corrie, and Eskdalemuir. The surface is generally hilly and mountainous, abounding in sheep-walks. The predominant rocks are graywacke and graywacke-slate, with shell marl at Megdale, and antimony at Jamestown. In the vicinity are ruins of Westerhall and Glendonwyn or Glendenning towers, with some remains of Crooks and Enzieholm towers, besides several hill forts and burians or "picts" houses, and Druidical circle and several ancient camps. The village is about 5 miles N.W. of Langholm, and stands at the confluence of the rivers Meggot and Stennis with the Esk, and on the road from Langholm to Ettrick and Selkirk. The parish formerly belonged to the Glendonwyns, and contained Eskdalemuir till 1703. The par. is in the presb. of Langholm and synod of Dumfries. The stipend of the minister is about £153. The parish church was erected in 1788, and the churchyard contains the mausoleum of the Johnstone family. There are a parochial school and a public library, the latter founded and endowed in 1795 by Telford, the civil engineer, who was a native of this parish. Sir J. Malcolm, author of "History of Persia," Governor Johnstone, and Admiral Palsey were also born here. The principal seats are Westerhall, Burnfoot, Dowsglen, and Hopesrigg.

WESTERLEIGH, a par. and vil. in the hund. of Puckle-Church, co. Gloucester, 3 miles S.W. of Chipping-Sodbury, 9 N.E. of Bristol, and 1½ mile S.W. of the Yate station on the Bristol and Gloucester railway.

The par., which formed part of Puckle-Church till the 14th century, includes the ecclesiastical district of St. Saviour's, Coalpit Heath, and the hmlts. of Henfield, Kendalshire, Mayshill, and Nibley. The soil is loamy, upon a subsoil of pennant-stone. There are extensive collieries at Coalpit Heath and other parts of the parish, the produce of which is conveyed to Bristol by means of a tramway 9 miles in length, passing through a tunnel 1,540 feet in length. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, attached to the vic. of Puckle-Church, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Wells. The church, dedicated to St. James, contains an old font on one pillar and a stone pulpit. The Independents have a chapel, and there are National schools. The parochial charities produce about £42 per annum, including a school endowment of £20. A fair is held on 19th September for cattle, pigs, &c.

WESTMEATH, an inland co. in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, is bounded N. by the cos. of Longford, Cavan, and Meath, E. by the co. of Meath, S. by King's Co., and W. by Roscommon and Longford. It lies between 53° 8′ and 53° 48′ N. lat., 6° 54′ and 7° 55′ W. long. Its extreme length from E.N.E. to W.S.W. is 36 miles, and its greatest breadth at right angles to that line is 25 miles. Its area is 708 square miles, or 463,468 acres, of which 365,218 are arable, 56,392 are uncultivated, 8,803 in plantations, 628 in towns, and 22,427 under water. The population in 1841 was 141,300, in 1851 it was 111,407, and in 1861 it was 90,879, or only 64 per cent. of the population in 1841. In 1861, 16,589 houses were inhabited, 435 were uninhabited, and 39 in course of construction. The Poor-law valuation in 1851 was £257,551, and the general valuation in 1861 was £314,544. The number of persons from this county who emigrated from Irish ports with the expressed intention of not returning between May, 1851, and December, 1865, was 24,456, or 22 per cent. of the population at the former date.—The county formed the western division of the kingdom of Meath, to which Longford also belonged. During the occupation of the country by the Danes it suffered severely, and was the scene of civil contentions. It was granted by Henry II. to Hugh de Lacy, who had assisted to reduce it, and was by him divided amongst his followers. The Irish made repeated attempts to recover their patrimony, but without success. The separation from Meath, or East Meath, took place under Henry VIII., but it was not till Elizabeth's reign that the county of Longford was formed. The very central position of this county probably contributed to keep it comparatively unaffected by the disturbances which were so general through Ireland in the years succeeding 1641, in 1690, and in 1798.—The surface is principally a luxuriant plain, varied by undulating swells, gravelly ridges, and a few low hills; there are no mountains, the greatest elevation being only 849 feet. A few patches of bog are found in the S. and E., and some extensive lakes in the N.W. and centre. Lough Rea, an expansion of the Shannon river, is the largest of these, and contains some islets upon which are found traces of abbeys or monasteries. Loughs Sheelin and Kinnail occupy the most northerly point of the county, and in the interior are Loughs Deveragh, Iron, Hoyle, and Ennel, with others. Most of these are connected by small streams, which at length, mingled with the waters of the Brosna and the Inny, make their way to the Shannon. The centre and W. of the county belong to the basin of this river; the eastern to that of the Boyne, and is drained by several small tributaries. The county is diversified only by its lakes, affording a great contrast to the wild mountain scenery of Wicklow and Kerry.—The Midland Great Western railway passes through the county from E. to W., and communicates with Dublin and Galway, with branch lines from Mullingar to Sligo, and to Clones and the N., and the Tullamore branch of the Great Southern and Western line affords easy access to the S. The principal roads are those from Dublin to Longford, Granard, and Athlone respectively; branches from these lead to the other portions of the county. The Shannon is navigable through its entire course to the sea, and steamers ply on it daily between Athlone and Limerick. The Royal canal, connecting Dublin with the Shannon navigation at Termonbarry, crosses the county from E. to N.W., passing near Killucan and Mullingar, and there is a branch from the Grand canal between Philipstown and Tullamore to Kilbeggan in this county.—This county presents less variety in its geological features than any other in Ireland, and excels all others in the aggregate wealth of the prevailing substrata. It belongs wholly to the central carboniferous district. It is principally of the culp, or black shale series, consisting of impure black argillaceous limestone, alternating with black shale, containing balls of clay and ironstone. The hillocky ridges which are scattered through the county are accumulations of limestone gravel. There are two small districts in the neighbourhood of Moate of yellow sandstone formation, but these are attributed to the same period as the carboniferous limestone, of which series they constitute the lowest members.—Being an inland county, with few lofty hills, it is not subject to extremes of heat and cold, and the rainfall is not excessive. The soil in the eastern parts is a rich loam, from 7 to 12 inches in depth, resting on a yellow till, producing fine pastures. The central and northern districts are hilly, but large numbers of sheep and black cattle are fed on it. The soil in the western parts is interspersed with bog, but it produces potatoes, oats, and flax. Horses are extensively reared to supply the Dublin and English markets, and large numbers of pigs are kept. Dairies are numerous, and a small quantity of cheese is made. Wheat and barley are very little grown; the principal crops are oats and potatoes. In 1865, 115,177 acres, or 32 per cent. of the arable land was under crops. Of this extent only 1,196 acres were under wheat, and 568 under barley, bere, and rye, 38,660 under oats, 16,548 of potatoes, 6,619 of turnips, 1,301 of other green crops, 342 of flax, and 50,943 of meadow and clover. There were only three counties in Ireland, of which a large proportion of the entire area was grass, exclusive of meadow and clover—viz., Meath, Limerick, and Fermanagh. In 1863 there were on 11,943 holdings 13,481 horses, 4,192 mules and asses, 79,312 cattle, 132,428 sheep, 15,634 pigs, 4,405 goats, 218,503 poultry, of the estimated value of £792,132. The peasantry are intelligent, and readily adopt improved systems of farming. Their houses are small, but neatly kept. Of 17,526 families in 1861, 7,334 were returned as engaged in agriculture, 2,736 at some manufactures or trades, and 7,456 were employed at other pursuits. Flour and meal are manufactured in large quantities, and there are two woollen factories containing 1,692 spindles, and 25 where about 120 persons are employed.—The county belongs chiefly to the dioc. of Meath, but also to that of Ardagh, which is united to the sees of Kilmore and Elphin. In the Roman Catholic distribution it is in the diocese of Meath, and the joint diocese of Ardagh and Clonmacnois. Of the population in 1861, 6,336, or 7·0 per cent., were members of the Established church; 83,749, or 92·1 per cent., were Roman Catholics; and 794, or 0·9 per cent., belonged to other denominations. The county returns three members to parliament, two for the county at large, constituency 3,568 in 1865, and one for Athlone burgh, constituency 219. It is divided into 12 baronies —Brawny, Clonlonan, Corkaree, Delvin, Farbill, Fartullagh, Fore, Kilkenny West, Moyashel and Magheradernan, Moycashel, Moygoish, and Rathconrath, and contains 63 parishes. Its government is intrusted to a lieutenant and custos, a vice-lieutenant, a deputy-custos, a high sheriff, 18 deputy-lieutenants, 2 resident and about 121 local magistrates. It is in the home circuit, and the assizes are held at Mullingar. Quarter sessions are held there, and at Moate and Delvin, and petty sessions at 16 places. The county gaol, county infirmary, and district lunatic asylum, are at Mullingar, and there is a bridewell at Moate. The county is in the military district of Dublin, and there is a barrack station at Mullingar. Fairs are held in 40 places, and there are 9 market towns. The Poor-law Unions are Athlone, Delvin, and Mullingar, containing 16 dispensary districts. In 1861 there were 110 National schools, 30 schools under the church education and other societies, and 27 private schools, in which primary education was given, and there were 7 superior schools in which the course of instruction included at least one foreign language. In that year 38 per cent. of the population over five years of age were wholly ignorant, 21 per cent. could read only, and 41 per cent. could read and write. In 1841 the per centages were 52, 22, and 26 respectively. In 1863 there were 124 National schools, attended by 6,422 males and 7,122 females.—The principal seats in the country are Pakenham Hall, Earl of Longford; Rosmeade, Lord Vaux of Harrowden; Moydrum Castle, Lord Castlemaine; Gaulstown Park, Lord Kilmaine; Knockdrin Castle, Levinge, Bart.; Killua Castle, Chapman, Bart.; Rochfort, Hopkins, Bart.; Donore, Nugent, Bart.; Ballinlough, Nugent, Bart.; with numerous mansions of the resident gentry.—The chief antiquities are Druidical remains at Castletown Geoghegan, ancient forts at Kilbeggan, Rathconrath, and Turgesius, and the ruins of abbeys and castles in many places, including some castles of the De Lacys. One of them, called Sonnagh Castle, is situated upon the edge of a small lake. Westmeath gives the title of Marquis to the Nugent family.

WESTMESTON, a par. in the hund. of Street, rape of Lewes, co. Sussex, 6 miles N. of Brighton, and 3 S.E. of Hassock's Gate station on the London and Brighton railway. The village is situated under South Down, and includes the hmlt. of Chillington. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £536. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. The register dates from 1587. There is a National school.

WESTMILL, a par. in the hund. of Braughin, co. Herts, 1½ mile S.E. of Buntingford, and 9 miles N. of Ware. The village is situated on the N. road near the river Lemonfield Rib. It was the site of a Roman pottery, and two Roman cups were found in 1828. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £470. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The interior has been restored, and the E. window is of stained glass. The register dates from 1560. There are National and other schools.

WESTMILL, a vil. in the par. of Cockpen, co. Edinburgh, Scotland, 2 miles S.W. of Dalkeith. It is situated on the North Esk, adjoining the town of Lasswade, of which it forms a suburb.

WESTMINSTER, a city and metropolitan borough locally in the Kensington div. of Ossulstone hund., co. Middlesex, about 1½ mile S.W. of St. Paul's cathedral. It is a place of great antiquity, having been, as is said, the site of a temple to Apollo in the Roman times; but the present city dates from the beginning of the 7th century, when Sebert, king of the East Saxons, erected the Abbey church on Thorney Island, then a marshy spot, almost surrounded by water, and named it "West Mynstre," in contradistinction to the East Minster, or St. Paul's, which had been previously founded by Ethelbert. The city of Westminster, as it is correctly called, by reason of its containing the abbey, which is a cathedral church, includes the whole of the court portion of the metropolis, extending along the N. bank of the Thames for about 3½ miles—viz., from Temple Bar in the E. to beyond Kensington Palace in the W., and has a varying breadth of from half a mile to 2 miles. Its boundaries are the city of London proper on the E. and N.E., the Thames on the S. and S.E., Oxford Street on the N., and an irregular line on the W., running from Kensington gardens towards Chelsea Hospital. In 1851 it contained 24,755 houses, inhabited by a population of 241,611, and in 1861, 26,286 houses, inhabited by 254,623. As a borough it has returned two members to parliament since the reign of Edward VI., and is governed by a high-steward, with a high-bailiff of his appointment, but both holding office for life, and by 16 burgesses, each having jurisdiction, over a separate ward, similar to that exercised by an alderman of London. It has access across the Thames with the Surrey side by the Suspension, Waterloo, Westminster, and Vauxhall bridges, and contains Hyde Park, the Green Park, St. James's Park, and Kensington Gardens, also Buckingham Palace, the town residence of her Majesty, St. James's Palace, where drawing-rooms and receptions take place, the Houses of Parliament, the Abbey, the Supreme Courts, Chelsea Hospital, the Victoria railway stations, besides the more important government offices, and the town residences of the principal nobility and gentry, a fuller description of which has already been given under the article LONDON.

WESTMINSTER, a hund., co. Gloucester, in two divs., lower and upper. The former contains the pars. of Corse, Hasfield, and parts of Boddington, Deerhurst, Elmstone, Hardwick, and Leigh; and the latter, Moreton-in-the-Marsh, Sutton-under-Brails, Toddenham, and part of Bourton-on-the-Hill, together comprising 14,140 acres.

WESTMOOR, an ext. par. place adjoining Curry Rivell, co. Somerset.

WESTMORELAND, a small hilly co. in the extreme N.W. of England, forming a part of what is known as the lake district, as implied by its name, the ancient form of which was Westmoringaland or Westmerland. It contains only 758 square miles, or 485,432 acres, of which a large proportion is bleak moorland. It is bounded on the N. and N.W. by Cumberland and Ulleswater Lake, on the S. and S.W. by Lancaster and Morecambe Bay, on the N.E. by Durham and the river Tees, and on the E. and S.E. by Yorkshire. Its greatest length is 39 miles, and its greatest breadth from E. to W. about 30 miles. In the earliest times it appears to have been the seat of the hill tribes, Voluntii and Sistuntii, offshoots of the Brigantes, and after its reduction by the Romans formed part of the province Maxima Cæsariensis. The Saxons early planted it, and annexed it to their kingdom of Northumbria under the name of Applebiscire, which was afterwards exchanged for that of Westmoringaland. At the time of the Norman conquest it was held by the tenure of Border service, and was divided into the two baronies of Kendal and Appleby, or the Bottom of Westmoreland, the former being possessed by Ivo de Tallebois, and the latter by Ranulph de Meschines, from whom it afterwards passed to the Morville, Vipont, Clifford, and Tufton families.—The surface, with the exception of a small portion in the S., sloping towards Morecambe Bay, is mountainous, being all moors and fells, with deep valleys between, watered by numberless lakes and streams. The most extensive vales are that of the Eden, reaching from about 10 miles S.E. of Kirkby-Stephen in a north-westerly direction by Appleby, towards Penrith; and that of Kendal, more particularly southward and westward of that town. Loose masses of rock or boulders, of various sizes and descriptions, are scattered over all the lower hills and the champaign parts of the county; and on the southern side of Shap, along the road towards Kendal, different streams, and especially Wastdale-beck, force their passage amidst stupendous blocks of rounded granite. Cross Fell, at the north-eastern extremity of the county, which is the highest of the chain of mountains extending along the eastern borders of Westmoreland and Cumberland, rises to the height of 2,901 feet above the level of the sea. The other greatest elevations included wholly or partly within its limits are Helvellyn, 3,055 feet high; Bowfell, 2,911 feet high; Rydal Head, 3,090; Fairfield, 2,950; Langdale Pike, 2,400; and High Street Fell, 2,730; Wastdale Crag, 1,500, being the highest of the Shap fells, besides numerous other fells and hills, the forms of which are mostly rugged and irregular in outline. All these mountains command extensive prospects, and from Rydal Head are seen the lakes Windermere, with its 13 islands, Elter-water, Grassmere, and Rydal-water. The other principal lakes are Ulleswater, 8 miles long, of which the higher part is wholly within the limits of this county, but the lower end, called Ousemere, is divided between it and Cumberland; Hawswater, situated in the narrow vale of Mardale; and Broadwater, about a mile above the head of Ulleswater; there are besides several smaller lakes, commonly called tarns or meres, abounding in trout, some of which weigh 30 lbs., pike, perch, tench, roach, char, eels, and wild fowl. There are mineral springs at Shap Wells, Clifton, and Roundthwaite, and numerous petrifying wells on the banks of the river Kent, and in the cave called Pate-hole.—The rivers of Westmoreland are little more than mountain streams. The Eden, the largest, flows 30 miles, and the Lune, the next in size, 27 miles within the county, without becoming navigable. The Kenn, or Kent, though not so long as either, is more important from forming the broad estuary which terminates in Morecambe Bay. The head waters of the streams which run N. to Ulleswater and the Lowther are separated by the mountain ridges of Fairfield and Shap Fells from those running S. to Windermere and the rivers Kent, Lune, and Eden. By means of the canal uniting Kendal with Lancaster, there is water communication with the general system of inland navigation.—It is traversed by part of the main line of the Lancaster and Carlisle railway, which passes by Burton, Milnthorpe, Kendal, Tebay, Shap, Clifton, and Penrith, to the West Lowlands, with a branch line to the S. skirting Morecambe Bay, and another branch from Kendal to Windermere. A line also joins the Northumberland railway, passing to the N.E. by Orton. The Eden Valley railway joins the Stockton and Darlington line with the Lancaster and Carlisle, at Clifton, in Cumberland. The roads are generally good, considering the uneven and rugged character of the surface, and owing to the number of tourists the county is better provided with travelling accommodation than its thin population would otherwise afford.—Notwithstanding the numerous enclosures and improvements that have taken place since the commencement of the present century, the cultivated lands scarcely amount to a moiety of the whole extent of the surface. The arable land is mostly confined to the valleys, where the soil usually consists of a dry gravelly loam. The far greater part of the remaining surface is natural pasture, particularly in high situations; and as farmers, during the summer months, pasture their cattle on the extensive commons and moors, with which the county abounds, their chief object is to get as much hay as possible from their enclosed lands. Draining is now generally practised, and lime abounds. Most of the fences are of rough stone, and the estatesmen or small farmers, who frequently hold from 20 to 300 acres as freeholds or copyholds, still live in a primitive way. Timber is chiefly found in the plantations, which are numerous, especially around Lowther Castle and other seats, and at Rydal, Whinfell, and Milbourne, where are remains of the old forests which once covered all the hills, but are now supplanted by bog and peat. The larch is generally the most flourishing tree, though oak, ash, alder, holly, birch, and hazel are indigenous, and when planted thrives with a degree of vigour hardly to be expected from the bleak and exposed situations which they often occupy. The wastes or commons comprise generally extensive mountainous tracts, termed fells and moors, which produce little besides a coarse grass, heath, and ferns, provincially called ling and brackens, but some of the commons in low situations possess a good soil, and are capable of much improvement. In the hills the climate is bleak and humid, but along the borders of the lakes and in the sheltered valleys warm and genial. The rain-fall is very heavy, ranking among the highest in England, yet the country is very healthy.—A remarkable feature of Westmoreland is the large number of persons who emigrate to other parts of England, or the colonies, yet leaving the proportion of the sexes nearly equal. The population is sturdy, industrious, and intelligent, and almost purely English, there being but a small admixture of Irish, Welsh, or Scotch. In 1700 the county contained about 28,600 inhabitants; in 1801, the first year for which there is a census, it had increased to 40,805; and in 1861 to 60,817, showing a gradual augmentation consequent upon the improvement of husbandry and grazing, and the development of manufacturing and mining industry. Among the manufactures, which, however, constitute but a secondary interest in the county, are woollen, worsted, carpets, and rugs, flax, linen, hosiery, sacking, canvas, and buckram, with a small business in paper and gunpowder.—The minerals include graphite, for which Borrowdale was long famous; lead, which is extensively worked at Dunfell or Dunall, and at Eagle Craig, Greenside, Glenriddling, and Staveley in Patterdale; also copper is worked near Ashby, Kirkby-Stephen, Orton, Raine, and Shap, and coal of an inferior quality at Casterton, Mallerstang, and Stainmoor. Iron has been found near Appleby. Gypsum is quarried at Acornbank; marble near Kendal, Ambleside, and Kirkby Lonsdale; good roofing slate at Kentmere, Ambleside, Thrang Crag, and Whitemoss; pink and blue granite in Wastdale Crags, besides many detached blocks, along with ragstone and coarse galliard slate, dispersed about in all parts. The prevailing strata in the E. and S.E. belong to the carboniferous or mountain limestone formation, which constitutes the whole of the Ravenstonedale and Wildboar fells; towards the N. in the vale of the Eden, the new red sandstone appears in connection with a small troubled coal-field, and in the N.E., millstone grit, granite, and porphyry, especially between Shap and Moorland, and near Tebay; the rest of the shire in the W. belongs to the Lower, and in the centre to the Upper Silurian formation.—For administrative purposes the county is divided into four wards, viz., Kendal, or the Vale of the Kenn, in the S.W.; Lonsdale, or the Vale of the Lune, in the S.; West ward, in the N.W.; and East ward, in the N.E.; there was formerly another ward called Middle ward, but it has been divided between East and West wards. These wards comprise 31 entire parishes, with parts of another, also 10 market towns, and about 230 villages and hamlets. Appleby, with a population of 1,500 was the ancient capital, and is still the assize and sessions town, but Kendal is the real capital, and the only parliamentary and municipal borough, having a population of 11,829: the other principal towns are Ambleside, with 1,000 inhabitants; Burton-in-Kendal, 500; Holme, 1,000; Kirkby Lonsdale, 1,000; Kirkby-Stephen, 1,000; and Milnthorpe, 1,000, the last being a watering-place and small port; besides Shap, Brough, and Orton, which are also market towns. The shire returns three members to parliament, viz., two for the county, with Appleby for the election town, and one for the new borough of Kendal. It is included in the north-eastern military district and in the northern circuit, and is governed by a lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum, assisted by a high sheriff, hereditary in the Tufton family, 15 deputy lieutenants, and about 105 magistrates. It constitutes the deaneries of Westmoreland and Kendal within the bishopric of Carlisle and province of York. Most of the 81 parishes are extensive hilly tracts, so that many of the villages are several miles from the parish church, but arrangements have recently been made to give more church accommodation than formerly. Considering that the country is poor and the population widely scattered, the state of education is satisfactory, only 26½ per cent in 1851 having signed the marriage register with marks, and since that time a much larger proportion of the population have been in attendance at the schools, many of which are endowed. Although there is no college or establishment for superior education within the county, there are no less than 29 grammar schools, with 1,139 boys under instruction. There are only three Poor-law Unions, viz., East ward, West ward, and Kendal, which are also superintendent registry districts; and four new county courts, viz., Appleby, Ambleside, Kendal, and Kirkby Lonsdale. The principal seats are Lowther Castle and Brougham Hall.

WESTMUIR, a district in the par. of Cambuslang, co. Lanark, Scotland.

WESTMUIR, a vil. in the par. of Kirriemuir, co. Forfar, Scotland, 4 miles N.W. of Forfar.

WESTON, a par. in the hund. of Bath-Forum, co. Somerset, 2 miles N.W. of Bath. The upper road from Bath to Bristol passes through the parish, and the line of the Great Western railway within a mile. A stream rising in Lansdown hill flows through the village to the river Avon, skirting the southern boundary of the parish, and here crossed by a stone bridge. On Lansdown hill is a monument to the memory of Sir Bevill Grenville, who fell in a battle between the Parliamentarians and Royalists in 1643. The substratum in the uplands is of inferior oolite, and in the lower grounds blue lias, which is quarried for burning into lime. The soil is loamy. The quarries contain many fossil remains, including bones of the ichthyosaurus. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. with the cur. of St. John's annexed, £460, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was rebuilt in 1832, with the exception of the tower. The register dates from 1538. There are besides, the district church of St. John, erected in 1838, and the chapel of Partis College. The Wesleyans, Baptists, and Lady Huntingdon's Connexion have chapels. The are National, infant, and Sunday-schools. The local charities produce about £25 per annum. A fair is held on the 10th August for cattle, sheep, pigs, and cheese.

WESTRUTHER, a par. in co. Berwick, Scotland. It contains a vil. of its own name and that of Hounslow. It extends in length about 6 miles from N. to S., with a varying breadth of from 3 to 5½ miles. The surface in the N. is for the most part hilly and bleak, abounding in sheep-walks, and rising to an altitude of 1,260 feet above sea-level, but on the S. it is in a good state of cultivation. The par. is principally drained by three streams which traverse the boundaries, viz., a head stream of the Blackadder, and two confluent tributaries of the Leader. In the N. the prevailing rocks are graywacke, which are barely covered by the soil, and in the S. Red sandstone, which is quarried. On Twinlaw hill are two cairns, and at Evelan is a peel-tower. The parish is traversed by the roads from Lauder to Dunse, Greenlaw and Kelso. The village of Westruther, which is about 7 miles E. of Lauder, is situated under the Lammermuir hills, and on the road from Lauder to Dunse. This par. is in the presb. of Lauder and synod of Merse and Teviotdale, and in the patron. of the crown. The stipend of the minister is about £158. The parish church was erected about 1649, and restored in 1807. There are a parochial school, three private schools, and a public library. The principal seats are Spottiswoode House, Bassendean House, and Wedderlie, the shooting-box of Lord Blantyre, partly in ruins.

WEST VILLE, a parochial tnshp. in the W. div. of Bolingbroke soke, parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, near Bolingbroke. This township, which is not dependent on any parish, was created by Act of parliament in 1812, on the occasion of an extensive drainage of Wildmore and the East and West Fens.

WESTWARD, a par. and large vil. in the ward of Allerdale-below-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 3 miles S.E. of Wigton. At Curthwaite is a station on the Carlisle and Maryport railway, which passes to the N.E. of the village. This place derives its name from its situation in the great forest of Inglewood, of which it formed the western ward, under the charge of the forester. The par., which comprises the tnshps. of Brocklebank, Stoneraise, Rosley, and Woodside, is bounded on the E. by the Wampool river, and on the S. by the headstream of the river Waver. There are extensive quarries of limestone, red freestone, and slate, and several seams of cannel and other coal. The soil is of strong clay and loam, with sand in Woodside Quarter. The land, which is in a high state of cultivation, chiefly belongs to General Wyndham, who is lord of the manor, and Sir Wastel Brisco, Bart. About a mile from the church is a farmhouse called Isle Kirk Hall, or Hildkirk, from a hermitage which formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Hilda, and which was given by King John to the abbey of Holme-Cultram. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £130, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The dedication of the church, situated in the township of Stoneraise, is unknown. An additional church was erected in 1840. The parochial charities produce about £10 per annum, including £7 for support of a school. At Old Carlisle, about 1½ mile N. of the village, is the site of an extensive Roman station on the Roman road from Carlisle (anciently Lugovallum) to Ellenborough (anciently Volantium), which Horsley supposes to have been the Olenacum of the Notitia, where the Ala Herculea and Ala Augusta were stationed. The walls include a quadrilateral area, 170 yards long by 120 broad, with obtuse angles, and surrounded by a double ditch, within which sacrificial instruments, images, statues, altars, coins, and other antiquities have been found. Fairs for horses, sheep, and cattle are held at Rosley on the 21st April and third Monday in October.

WETHERAL, a par. and vil. chiefly in Cumberland ward, but partly in Eskdale ward, co. Cumberland, 5 miles S.E. of Carlisle. It is a station on the Newcastle and Carlisle railway, which is here carried across the river Eden by a bridge of five arches, 80 feet span, and about 100 feet above the surface of the water. There is also another bridge across the valley of the Corby Beck, 480 feet in length, which consists of seven arches of 40 feet span. The par. includes the tnshps. and vils. of Great Corby, with Warwick Bridge, Cumwhinton, with Coathill, Scotby, and the hmlt. of Holme Park. The village is situated on the steep banks of the Eden. There are quarries of red freestone and alabaster. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. with that of Warwick Bridge annexed, £150, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was built in the reign of Henry VIII., with a mortuary chapel attached of the Howards of Corby, built in 1791. There are besides several district churches and chapels in the townships above named. The National schools at Wetheral were founded in 1760 and rebuilt in 1854. A little to the S. of the village, on the bank of the Eden, are the ruins of Wetheral Priory, founded by Ranulph de Meschines in 1088, as a cell to the abbey of St. Mary at York. At the Dissolution its revenues were returned at £128 5*s.* 3*d.* Of the conventual building the tower or gatehouse is all that remains, but near the site are three ancient cells called the Safeguards, excavated in the steep face of the rock at the height of 40 feet above the river, and on the opposite side is a full-length stone statue of St. Constantine. Corby Castle is the seat of the Howards, which stands on the site of a more ancient castle purchased by Lord William Howard, third son of the Duke of Norfolk, in 1624, and still remains in the hands of his descendants. The principal landowners are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the Duke of Devonshire, and John Ramsay, M.D.

WETHERBY, a tnshp., chplry., and small market town in the par. of Spofforth, upper div. of Claro wap., West Riding co. York, 7 miles N.W. of Tadcaster, 12 N.E. of Leeds, and 13 S.W. of York. It is a station on the Harrogate branch of the North-Eastern railway. It was anciently called Wederby, from the Saxon word "to turn," descriptive of its situation on a bend of the river Wharfe, which is here crossed by a stone bridge of six arches. About 3½ miles below the bridge is St. Helen's Ford, where the Roman military way crossed, and a little above it is a modern weir, or dam, for working a large corn-mill. The town consists of several streets and a market-place. It has recently been much improved. The houses are principally built of stone, and there are some good shops, a branch bank, corn, oil, and dye-wood mills, and an extensive brewery. It is not incorporated, but is under the board of guardians for the Wetherby division. The quarter sessions for the West Riding are held in the townhall at Christmas, in rotation with Knaresborough, Skipton, and Pontefract. The petty sessions are held fortnightly, the Earl of Harewood being chairman, and courts leet and baron are held on Lady-day and Michaelmas-day. Previous to the year 1824 the whole town belonged to the Duke of Devonshire, but at that time it was sold in small lots or freeholds. It is famed in history for the noble defence made by the small garrison under Sir Thomas Fairfax, who twice repulsed a much superior force of royalists in 1642. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £120, in the patron. of the Rector of Spofforth. The church is dedicated to St. James. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel, and there are National and Wesleyan day schools. Market day is Thursday for corn and provisions, and is well attended. Fairs are held every alternate Thursday for horses and cattle, and statute fairs in November.

WETHERDEN, a par. in the hund. of Stow, co. Suffolk, 4 miles N.W. of Stowmarket, and 1½ mile S.E. of Elmswell station, on the Great Eastern railway. It is a small scattered village, and has remains of the old seat of the Sulyards. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £500, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has a carved oak roof, and contains several brasses, an antique font, some old stalls, the arms of the Sulyards, and a monument to one of the Miles family. The register dates from 1538. There are a Baptist chapel and a village school. The parochial charities produce about £23 per annum, including £5, the endowment for a Sunday-school. Lord Thurlow is lord of the manor.

WETHERINGSETT, a par. in the hund. of Hartismere, co. Suffolk, 4 miles N.W. of Debenham, 3 N.E. of Mendlesham, and 3½ S.E. of Finningham station, on the Great Eastern railway. The vil. includes the hmlt. of Brockford, where the parish church is situated. The land is fertile, and the soil clay alternated with loam. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £714. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The register dates from 1583. The parochial charities produce £120 per annum, including the town lands and a bequest of 40*s.* to provide dinner for twenty poor people on Lady-day in the church. The Rev. R. Hakluyt, compiler of "Early English Voyages," was once rector.

WETHERLEY, a hund., co. Cambridge, contains the pars. of Arrington, Barrington, Barton, Comberton, Coton, Grantchester, Harleton, Haslingfield, Orwell, Shepreth, and Wimpole, comprising 18,559 acres.

WETHERSFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, co. Essex, 6½ miles N.W. of Braintree, its post town and railway station. The village belonged to Algar, Earl of Mercia, in the time of Edward the Confessor. The par. includes the hmlts. of Blackmore End and Beazley End, and is bounded by the river Blackwater or Pant, on which are several large flour-mills. It is a meet for the East Essex hounds. It was formerly a royal manor, and Thomas White, Esq., the proprietor of the two manors of Wethersfield and Codham Hall, still holds a manorial court annually. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £320, in the patron. of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. There is a chapel for Independents, but Codham Hall, once a Roman Catholic chapel, is now a farmhouse. There are National schools, partly supported by Nott's and Fitch's endowments for education. The parochial charities, including the school endowments and the "Guildhall" or poors' house, produce about £280 per annum.

WETLEY ROCKS, a vil. and chplry. in the pars. of Cheddleton and Caverswall, co. Stafford, 4 miles N.W. of Cheadle, and 2 S. of Cheddleton railway station. It is situated near the Uttoxeter canal, under Wetley Rocks, a ridge of lofty hills 150 feet high and extending three quarters of a mile. The principal seats are Wetley Abbey and Consall Hall. On Wetley Rocks is a colliery. The chplry. includes the hmlt. of Cellarhead. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £50. The church is dedicated to St. John. The Methodists of the New Connexion have a chapel, and there is a National School.

WETTENHALL, a chplry. in the par. of Over, first div. of Eddisbury hund., co. Chester, 5 miles S.E. of Tarporley, and 6 N.W. of Nantwich, on a branch of the river Weaver.

WETTLETON, a tnshp. in the par. of Stokesay, co. Salop, 7 miles N.W. of Ludlow, on the river Onny.

WETTON, a par. in the hund. of Totmonslow, co. Stafford, 7½ miles N.W. of Ashbourn, 10 E. of Leek, and 2 W. of Alstonfield. The village is situated in the Moorlands. The river Manifold runs through the parish as far as Wetton-mill, where it disappears through the fissures of its limestone bed, and continuing a subterraneous course for about 5 miles, again emerges near the same spot where the river Hamps re-appears. There are quarries of excellent marble and limestone, and at Ecton hill is a copper mine, which was first wrought in the 17th century, and for a considerable period yielded a profit of £30,000 annually to the Duke of Devonshire, but is now nearly exhausted, as is also the lead mine on the opposite side of the hill. These mines are now under the management of Captain Samuel Bonsall, and are the only copper mines in this part of the county. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £150. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, was rebuilt in 1820, with the exception of the tower, which is old. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a free school, founded in 1719, with a small endowment; also a Sunday-school. Near the hamlet of Ecton is a limestone cliff, rising above the Manifold, in which is a cavern called Thusses Rock Cave, or Thor's House, nearly 44 yards long, and divided into several partitions or rooms, the roof being supported by a rough natural pillar.

WETWANG, a par. partly in the lib. of St. Peter's, and partly in the wap. of Buckrose, East Riding co. York, 6 miles N.W. of Great Driffield, and a quarter of a mile from the Wetwang station on the Malton and Driffield railway. The village, which is situated amongst the Wolds, consists principally of one street. The par. includes the tnshps. of Fimber and Firby. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £230, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The altar and pulpit are of carved Caen stone, and the windows have tracery and stone mullions. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Fimber. The Wesleyans have a chapel at Fimber. There are National and other schools, chiefly supported by Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes.

WEVERHAM. See WEAVERHAM, co. Chester.

WEXCOMBE, a tythg. in the par. of Great Bedwin, co. Wilts, 7 miles S.W. of Hungerford.

WEXFORD, a maritime co. in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, is bounded on the N. by Wicklow, E. by St. George's Channel, S. by the Atlantic Ocean, and W. by cos. Waterford, Kilkenny, and Carlow. It lies between 52° 6′ and 52° 48′ N. lat., 6° 8′ and 7° 2′ W. long. Its greatest length from N. to S. is 55 miles, and from E. to W. 34 miles. Its area is 900 square miles, or 576,588 acres, of which 510,702 are arable, 45,501 uncultivated, 14,325 plantations, 2,392 towns and villages, and 3,668 under water. Its population in 1851 was 180,159, and in 1861, 143,954. The number of inhabited houses in 1861 was 26,011; 990 were uninhabited, and 50 were in course of construction. The Poor-law valuation in 1851 was £330,537, and the general valuation in 1861 was £372,056. The number of persons from this county who emigrated from Irish ports with the expressed intention of not returning between May, 1851, and December, 1865, was 34,130, or 22 per cent. of the population at the former date.—The county was in the time of Ptolemy mostly occupied by the Menapii, a people of Belgic Gaul, who also extended into the adjoining county of Waterford. Their chief town, Menapia, is supposed to have occupied the site of the present capital, Wexford. The county was then divided into Corteigh, Moragh, and Laighion; the former gave its name to Enniscorthy, the second to the family of MacMurrough, chiefs of this district, and the last is preserved in "Leinster," by which name this county alone is known in most of the earlier writings. The Danes established themselves in the S., and having burned the capital, built a town, which they called Wiesford, a name which was extended to the surrounding districts. MacMurrough having asked for the assistance of the English in his war with O'Rourk, Prince of Breffny, Wexford was the first landing-place of the invaders, who came in 1169, under Robert Fitzstephen, and disembarked at Bagenbon, near Fethard, and after an assault upon the town of Wexford for four days, succeeded in taking it from the Danes. MacMurrough confirmed a grant of the town and part of the adjoining lands to the adventurers, whose position was strengthened by the support of Strongbow, who married Eva, daughter of MacMurrough, and on the death of his father-in-law, in 1172, was confirmed by Henry II. in the possession of his kingdom of Leinster as a palatinate. As he left no male heir, his territory was divided among his daughters, one of whom married William le Marischal. Early in the civil war of Charles I. the Marquis of Ormond was repulsed from before New Ross, Duncannon Fort was taken, and the entire county held by the Catholic party; but Cromwell, in 1649, after taking Drogheda, besieged and took the town of Wexford, when he put the inhabitants to the sword. The county held aloof during the Jacobite wars, but was the scene of stirring events in 1798, when the rebels took Enniscorthy and Wexford, forming their camp at Vinegar Hill, near the former place.—The county is traversed by several ranges of hills; the loftiest mountains are in the N.W., on the border of Carlow, the principal summit being Mount Leinster, which rises 2,610 feet above the sea-level. More S., in the same line, are the Blackstairs mountains, which attain an elevation of 2,409 feet. The Wicklow mountains extend into this county on the N., in a prolonged series, separating the basins of the Bann and the Slaney, the highest points being Armagh Hill, 1,498 feet, and Slieveboy, 1,385 feet. A low range, called Forth mountains, extends in a south-westerly direction from a point near the N. of Wexford Harbour, and separates the baronies of Forth and Bargy from the rest of the county; their greatest altitude is 774 feet. The S.E. corner of the county is a dead level, abounding in marl and calcareous soil, and exceedingly fertile. The coast is generally low and shingly, from Kilmichael Point, in the N.E., to Wexford Harbour, a distance of nearly 30 miles, and is skirted along the entire line by a series of sandbanks, marked at their northern extremity by the Arklow light-ship. The entrance to Wexford Harbour lies between the extremities of two long narrow sandy peninsulas, called Raven Point and Rosslare Point, and is less than a mile wide, with a shifting sand outside, rendering the navigation difficult. There are only 18 feet of water on the bar in high tides, so the port is inaccessible to large vessels, but after clearing the entrance the harbour suddenly expands to more than 8 miles in width, with a breadth of more than 4 miles, affording a view of the town of Wexford, which lies opposite to the entrance. A little S. of Wexford Harbour the coast forms another bay before reaching Greenore Point, between which and Carnsore Point is the south-eastern corner of Ireland. Rounding the latter point the coast trends westerly, passing a number of small bays and headlands, till it reaches Hook Head, where it suddenly turns to the N., and forms the eastern side of Waterford Harbour. Hook Head is marked with a stationary light, and lights have been placed at various parts along the coast, which is here rocky and dangerous. The Great and Little Saltee islands lie off the S. coast, and are marked by a floating light.—The principal rivers are the Slaney and the Barrow, the former, entering from Carlow on the N.W., flows across this county to Wexford Harbour, receiving in its course the waters of the Bann, Derry, Urn, and Boro. The Barrow, joined by the Nore, touches the county at the southern point of Carlow county, and flows along the boundary to the head of Waterford Harbour, communicating with the Grand canal.—The only railway is the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford line, at present completed only to Enniscorthy, 14 miles N.W. of the town of Wexford, but an extension to Waterford is in contemplation. The principal roads are those from Dublin by Gorey and Enniscorthy to Wexford, from Wexford to Waterford by New Ross, and from New Ross to Fethard by Ar-thurstown, besides numerous branch roads.—The geological formations of Carlow and Wicklow extend into this county, the mountain ridges in the N.W. consisting chiefly of granite, and the lower declivities of metamorphic rocks. The central parts of the county belong to the transition series, consisting principally of clay slate, graywacke, and graywacke slate, and extending eastwards to the Atlantic. The strata in the southern parts of the county are considerably inflected, in the northern maintaining a uniform north-easterly and south-westerly direction, with a dip to the S.E. The S.E. corner of the county is composed of quartz rock alternating with clay slate, except about Carnsore Point, where granite again appears, and in some places greenstone is found among the clay slate, and limestone in a few districts in the S., the latter being the surface rock of Hook Head, where it contains numerous bivalves and corallites. The principal minerals are copper ore, which exists near Wexford, and in the Forth mountains, plumbago and asbestos at Greenfield, near Enniscorthy, iron ore and lead in the Forth mountains and at Cairme, and silver and galena have been raised at Clonmines. The horns and bones of the moose deer have been found in the alluvial districts in the S. and W., and a perfect fossil skeleton of the Cervus Megaceros, or gigantic deer of Ireland, was found at Ballyhuskard, near the bog of Itty.—The climate is mild, healthy, and generally favourable to grain crops, though the south-eastern parts are exposed to storms, and suffer in winter from heavy rains. The soil is mostly of a cold clayey nature, the parts near the mountains are gravelly, but a rich belt lies along the coast. Agriculture is principally attended to, and dairies are numerous. In 1866, 240,106 acres, or 46 per cent. of the arable land, was under crops. There were 19,135 acres of wheat, 68,138 of oats, 38,886 of barley, bere, and rye, 4,673 of beans and pease, 29,341 of potatoes, 20,249 of green crops, 379 flax, and 59,305 meadow and clover. Much coarse woollen cloth, principally for domestic use, was formerly manufactured in various parts of the county; and there is at present a cotton factory with 5,100 spindles and 130 looms, in which nearly 100 persons are constantly employed. The fishery belongs principally to the district of Wexford, but partly to those of Arklow and Waterford. The Wexford district had in 1863 251 registered vessels, employing 1,214 men and boys, while that of Arklow had 296 vessels, employing 1,686 persons.—The county is chiefly in the dioc. of Ferns, which is united to the sees of Ossory and Leighlin, but a small part belongs to the dioc. of Dublin. In the Roman Catholic distribution, Ferns continues an independent see, and is suffragan to Dublin. Of the population in 1861, 12,759, or 8·8 per cent, were members of the Established Church, 130,103, or 90·4 per cent. were Roman Catholics, and 1,092, or 0·7 per cent. belonged to other denominations. The county returns four members to parliament, two for the county at large, constituency 6,368 in 1866, and one each for the boroughs of Wexford and New Ross, constituency 307 and 194 respectively. It is divided for civil purposes into 10 baronies, Ballaghkeen, North and South, Bantry, Bargy, Forth, Gorey, Scarawalsh, Shelburne, and Shelmaliere East and West, and contains 144 parishes. Its government is entrusted to a lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum, vice-lieutenant, high sheriff, and 23 deputy-lieutenants, assisted by one resident and about 121 local magistrates. It is in the Leinster circuit, the assizes being held at Wexford, where are the county gaol and county infirmary. Quarter sessions are held there and at Enniscorthy, Gorey, and New Ross, and petty session at 12 places. The county is in the military district of the Curragh, and there are barracks at Wexford, New Ross, and Duncannon Fort.—Fairs are held at 49 places, and there are 6 market towns. The principal seats are Courtown, Earl of Courtown; Dunbrody Park, Lord Templemore; Edermine House, Power, Bart.; Johnstown Castle, Power, Bart.; Prospect, Fetherston, Bart.; besides numerous mansions of the resident gentry.

WEXFORD, a seaport, market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, and the county town of co. Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 82 miles S. of Dublin, and 14 S.E. of Enniscorthy, the terminus of the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford railway, from which coaches run to Wexford. It is situated on the S. bank of the Slaney, where that river discharges itself into Wexford Harbour, lat. 52° 20′ N., long. 6° 27′ W. Its population in 1851 was 12,471, and in 1861, 11,673, inhabiting 2,018 houses. The town is said to be of Danish origin, and was formerly called Weisford. The principal matters connected with its history have been referred to in the notice of the county. The town consists of a quay, with two streets running nearly parallel with it, from which others branch off. The principal public buildings are the county-court house, townhall, gaol, union workhouse, infirmary, and fever hospital, theatre, and barracks. Along the quays and in the modern parts the houses are regular and well built, but in the older districts the streets are narrow and badly paved. The town is lighted with gas and well supplied with water. The corporation consists of the mayor, 3 aldermen, and 18 councillors, elected from 3 wards. The borough returns one member to parliament, and in 1866 had a constituency of 307. Of the population in 1861, 958 were members of the Established Church, 10,573 were Roman Catholics, 41 Presbyterians, 85 Methodists, 10 of the Society of Friends, and 6 of other persuasions. There are two parish churches, St. Iberius and St. Selskar. There are four Roman Catholic chapels, also Presbyterian, Methodist, and Independent meeting-houses. The places of education are St. Peter's Roman Catholic College, an endowed school, and National schools. The assizes for the county are held here, as well as quarter and petty sessions. Malting is carried on, and there are two steam corn mills and a distillery. The harbour is of an oblong shape, formed by the estuary of the Slaney; it extends 8 miles from N. to S., and is 4 miles wide, comprising an area of 14,000 acres; the entrance is less than a mile in width. It is admirably situated for commerce, but the traffic is limited by a bar across the mouth, having only 18 feet of water at high tides. The quays extend 1,000 yards in length. The export trade, which is confined to cattle, grain, butter, and other agricultural produce, is considerable. In 1863 the number of sailing vessels belonging to the port was 93, tonnage 9,022, also 4 steamers, tonnage 646. There is a dockyard with patent slip, where shipbuilding is carried on. The river is crossed by a wooden bridge of 733 feet in length, the ends of which rest on two causeways, 650 and 188 feet long respectively. The bridge is supported by 23 wooden piers, and has a drawbridge near the town end to admit vessels up and down the Slaney. Some part of the old walls of Wexford are yet standing, and the gates still remain, together with some ruins of abbeys and religious houses. The Poor-law Union comprises 33 electoral divisions. Market days are Wednesdays and Saturdays. Fairs are held on 25th February, 17th March, 1st May, 3rd and 29th June, 24th August, 29th September, 1st November, and 8th December.

WEXHAM, a par. in the hund. of Stoke, co. Bucks, 2 miles N.E. of Slough. The soil is a deep rich mould, on a substratum of ragstone. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £200, in the patron. of the crown. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

WEY, a river of cos. Hants and Surrey, rises near Alton in Hants, and passing by Godalming, where it becomes navigable, joins the Thames at Weybridge. It gives name to the Wey and Arun canal, which, by joining these two rivers, opens a navigation between the Thames and the English Channel.

WEY, a stream of co. Dorset, rises near Upway and falls into the sea at Weymouth.

WEYBOURN, a par. in the hund. of Holt, co Norfolk, 3 miles N.E. of Holt. It is bounded on the N. by the German Ocean. Part of the land is in heath and sheep-walks. The village is situated on the coast in a deep bay, sheltered by a semi-circular range of lofty hills. It contains a brewery, malting establishment, and house for curing fish. Some of the inhabitants are employed in the crab and lobster fishery. The living is a don. cur. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £50. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, with a square tower. The Earl of Orford is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WEYBREAD, a par. in the hund. of Hoxne, co. Suffolk, 9 miles E. of Diss, and 2 S.W. of Harleston station on the Great Eastern railway. The village contains Weybread Hall and Instead Manor-house, now converted into farmhouses. The land is fertile and the soil clayey. There are four manors, viz., the Rectory Manor, Weybread Hall, Hoblins, and Instead. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £120. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a National school and a small lending library.

WEYBRIDGE, a par. and large vil. in the first div. of Elmbridge hund., co. Surrey, 3 miles S.E. of Chertsey, 5 N.W. of Esher, and 19 S.W. of London by the South-Western railway, on which it is a station. The parish is bounded on the N. by the Thames, which is here joined by the Wey and Basingstoke canal and the river Wey, across which last is an ancient bridge. On the Green is a pillar 30 feet high, erected to the memory of the late Duchess of York, who formerly resided at Oatlands, commanding a view of the valley of the Thames, with Windsor Castle in the distance. This mansion, which occupies a site near the old palace built by Henry VIII., but of which now only the gateways and underground passages remain, has recently been converted into an hotel, known as the Oatlands Park Hotel. It is approached through a conservatory 36 feet in height, with corridors paved in encaustic tiles. In the grounds is the model of the Temple of Vesta, overhanging Broadwater Lake, also the Grotto, which cost £40,000, and in which George IV., when Prince of Wales, entertained his friends at a banquet. The air is salubrious and dry, and the soil sandy, upon a subsoil of gravel. The population has increased from 747 in 1801, to 1,600 in 1861. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £320, in the gift of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. James, was rebuilt in 1848; it contains a carved font, several old brasses, and a monument by Chantrey to the late Duchess of York, who was interred in the churchyard. There is a Roman Catholic chapel, with a painted E. window representing the Crucifixion, and a small private oratory attached to the priest's residence. In the interior of the chapel is the vault of the Orleans family, containing the remains of Louis Philippe, the late King of the French, the Duchess of Orleans, and the Duchess de Nemours. There are National schools for both sexes. The parochial charities produce about £80 per annum, of which about £38 were bequeathed for the repairs of the church. J. Sparks, Esq., is lord of the manor. The principal landowners are the Hon. Peter J. Locke-King, M.P., John Easthope, Bart., and T. Feetham, Esq.

WEYCROFT, a tythg. in the par. of Axminster, co. Devon, 2 miles from Axminster.

WEYHILL, a par. in the hund. of Andover, co. Hants, 3 miles N.W. of Andover. The par. includes the hmlts. of Penton Grafton, formerly a distinct par., Clanville, Nutbean, and Ragged Appleshaw. A large cattle and horse fair is held in October. Cheese, hops, and leather are also sold in considerable quantities during the fair. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £476, in the patron. of Queen's College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was much disfigured by Cromwell's soldiers. The manor and advowson were formerly held by the poet Chaucer, and subsequently given by Charles I. to Queen's College, Oxford, for services rendered during the civil war. The fair commences on 10th October, and lasts the five following days.

WEYMOUTH AND MELCOMBE REGIS, a market and sessions town, bonding port, municipal and parliamentary borough, and bathing-place, possessing independent jurisdiction, but locally in the hund. of Cullifordtree, Dorchester div. of co. Dorset, 8 miles S.W. of Dorchester, 128 from London by road, 148 by the London and South-Western, and 168¼ by the Wilts and Somerset section of the Great Western railway. Steamers ply regularly to Southampton and the Channel Islands, and to Portland. The present borough, which includes the two ancient boroughs of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis, is situated at the north-western side of a semicircular bay, formed by the mouth of the river Wey, which here falls into the English Channel near the end of the Chesil Bank. Weymouth is the more ancient borough of the two, though Melcombe Regis appears formerly to have enjoyed the greater privileges, and is now frequented as a watering-place. The former town takes its name from its situation at the mouth of the river Wey, over which there is a bridge connecting it with Melcombe Regis. The chapelry of Weymouth, in the parish of Wyke Regis, was given by Henry I. to the monastery of St. Swithin at Winchester, under the prior of which it obtained many privileges, and flourished to such an extent that, in 1348, it was able to furnish 20 ships for the siege of Calais. In 1588 it supplied 6 ships to Elizabeth against the Spanish Armada. In the 13th Eliz. an Act of Parliament was passed incorporating the two boroughs of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis. At the commencement of the civil war of Charles I. it was garrisoned for the king, but was taken by the parliamentary forces in 1644, and the year following sustained a siege by the Royalists. Its modern prosperity as a resort for sea-bathing dates from 1789, when it was visited by George III. and the Duke of Gloucester. Under the Municipal Reform Act it is divided into two wards, and is governed by a mayor, who is also returning officer, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, with the style of "mayor, aldermen, bailiffs, burgesses, and commonalty of the borough and town of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis." Its revenue is about £450. Previously to the passing of the Reform Act of 1832 it returned four members to parliament, two for each town, but since only two for the whole borough. Its population in 1851 was 9,458, and in 1861, 11,383, inhabiting 1,864 houses. The town consists principally of a sea frontage, to which the other streets run down, many of the latter being narrow and old. It is well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with excellent water. The Esplanade, which is above a mile in length, command a sea view, with lofty headlands to the E. and the Bill of Portland to the S. The public buildings are the guildhall; the market-house, in St. Mary-street; the fish market, on the Quay; the masonic hall, erected in 1826; the Royal Hotel and assembly-rooms; the theatre, in Augusta-place; two public libraries, the Royal Baths, and the library and museum belonging to the literary and scientific institute above; Royal Eye Infirmary, Royal Dispensary, custom-house, union workhouse, situated at Rodwell, on the Wyke Regis road, cavalry barracks a little to the W. of the town, and a race-stand overlooking the course, which is a level oblong one mile in circuit. The races take place in August or September. There are remains of a priory for Black Canons, of the 15th century, and in the vicinity are the ruins of Sandsfoot Castle, erected in 1533, for the defence of the coast, by Henry VIII. About a mile to the N.W. of the town is the extramural cemetery, approached by a bridge across the backwater, and at Radipole and Nottington are mineral springs. Many fossils are found in the lias rock, and there are traces of the Roman road to Dorchester. The Marquis of Bath takes from this place the title of baron. The Weymouth Poor-law Union comprises 17 parishes, with the Isle of Portland, and also the New County Court and Superintendent Registry districts. The bay, which makes a sweep of above two miles, is sheltered by a range of hills to the E., and by the Isle of Portland to the S., but the harbour has a bar at its mouth, and is obstructed by the Mixon shoal, the water being from 7 to 9 feet outside the harbour in the roads; the sea deepens to 7 fathoms towards the Portland breakwater, recently constructed. The exports are corn, bricks, tiles, Portland-stone, and china clay; and the imports, coal, timber, wine, colonial produce, &c. Shipbuilding and sail and rope making are extensively carried on. The livings of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis are in the deanery of Dorchester and dioc. of Salisbury; the former is a perpet. cur. detached from the rect. of Wyke Regis, not in charge; and the latter is a rect. with the cur. of Radipole annexed, joint val. £305. The church of the Holy Trinity, at Weymouth, was erected in 1836 by the late Rev. G. Chamberlaine. In the interior is a painting, by Vandyke, of the Crucifixion. The parish church of Melcombe Regis, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a painting of the Last Supper, by Sir James Thornhill, who was a native of Weymouth, and represented the borough in parliament. There is besides the church of St. John, for a district taken out of St. Mary's parish, opened in 1854. The Independents and Wesleyans have chapels. There are National schools, a British school, Edward's almshouses, and several benevolent institutions. The local charities produce about £200 per annum. Market days are Tuesday and Friday.

WEYTHEL, a hmlt. in the par. of Old Radnor, co. Radnor, 4 miles S.E. of New Radnor.

WHADDON, a par. in the hund. of Cottesloe, co. Bucks, 4 miles S.E. of Stony-Stratford, and 5 N.E. of Winslow. The village had formerly a market on Thursday. The manor belongs to W. S. Lowndes, Esq., who resides at the Hall, once the seat of Arthur Lord Grey, who was visited here by Queen Elizabeth in 1568, then on her Buckinghamshire progress. It was afterwards purchased and occupied by Browne Willis, the antiquary. An Act was passed in 1841 for allotting certain portions of land in the county in lieu of the common right on Whaddon Chase, still celebrated for its fox covers. This place gave the title of baron to Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, the favourite of James I. and Charles I. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £300, in the patron. of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Independents have a chapel, and there is a National school endowed with £10 per annum. The poors' land produces about £4 per annum. Spenser, the poet and secretary to Lord Grey, frequently stayed at Whaddon Hall; and Dr. R. Cox, Bishop of Ely, and one of the principal composers of the Liturgy, was born here in 1499.

WHADDON, a par. in the hund. of Armingford, co. Cambridge, 4 miles N. of Royston, and 2 W. of Meldreth railway station. The surface is generally level, and the river Cam flows through part of the lands. The village is situated on the Great North road. The advowson was appropriated to the collegiate church of Windsor in 1351, having previously belonged to the priory of Lewes. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £110, in the patron. of the Dean and Canons of Windsor, who are appropriators. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Lord Hardwick is lord of the manor.

WHADDON, a par. in the middle div. of Dudstone hund., co. Gloucester, 3 miles S.W. of Gloucester, and 5 N.W. of Stroud. The village is situated on the road from Stroud to Gloucester. The Great Western and Midland railways pass through the parish, but have no station. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, united with part of Brookthorpe. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, was restored in 1855, with the exception of the chancel, which belongs to the impropriator.

WHADDON, a par. in the hund. of Melksham, co. Wilts, 3 miles N.E. of Trowbridge. The parish is intersected by the river Avon and the Kennet and Avon canal. The living is a discharged rect. annexed to that of Hilperton. The manor belongs to Walter Long, Esq., M.P., who resides at Hilperton.

WHALE, a tnshp. in the par. of Lowther, co. Westmoreland, 3 miles N.W. of Shap, on the river Lowther.

WHALESBONE, a hund. in the rape of Lewes, co. Sussex, contains the pars. of West Blatchington and Brighthelmstone, comprising 590 acres, exclusive of Brighton.

WHALEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Bolsover, co. Derby, 9 miles E. of Chesterfield.

WHALEY ABBEY, a demesne on the Avonbeg, co. Wicklow, Ireland, near Rathdown. It occupies the site of the ancient abbey.

WHALEY WITH YEARDSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Taxall, hund. of Macclesfield, co. Chester, 9 miles S.E. of Stockport. It is intersected by the Peak Forest canal. At Whaley Bridge is a station of the Manchester, Stockport, and Buxton branch of the London and North-Western railway.

WHALLEY, an extensive par. lying within the cos. of Lancaster, Chester, and Yorkshire. It is about 30 miles in length, by 15 in breadth, with a population in 1861 of 167,456. The par. includes the municipal and parliamentary borough of Clitheroe, the market towns of Burnley, Colne, and Haslingden, besides the vils., hmlts., or tnshps. of Altham, Barlby, Barrowford, Briercliffe, Chatburn, Church-kirk, Clayton-le-Dale, Cliviger, Coldcoates, Downham, Dunnockshaw, Extwistle, Foulridge, Goldshaw Booth, Habergham-Eaves, now a district par., Hapton, Henheads, Henthorn, Heyhouses, Higham, Holme, Huncoat, Little Bowland, Little Ireland, Marsden, Great and Little; Meazley, Nelson Station, Old Lund Booth, Padiham, Pendleton, Portsmouth, Read, Reedley Hallows, Rough Lee Booth, Sareden, Simondstone, Sykeside, Trawden, Twiston, Wheatly-Car-Booth, Wiswell, Worsthome, Worston, West Close Booth, Whitewell, and Wheatley. It anciently included also the present parishes of Blackburn, Chipping, Mitton, Ribchester, Rochdale, and Slaidburn, which have been separated from it at different times. The rivers Calder and Ribble form a junction at the western extremity of the parish, and there are stations of the Bolton, Blackburn, and Clitheroe railway. The village of Whalley, which gives name to this parish, is situated on the river Calder, and contains the ruins of the abbey, founded in 1296 by Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, and now the property of John Taylor, Esq., of Morton Hall. Its revenue at the Dissolution was £551 4s. 6d. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £315, in the patron. of the Hulme trustees. The parish church, dedicated to All Saints, was repaired in 1855, when alterations were made in the interior, which contains several old brasses and monuments, screen work brought from the old abbey, and 18 ancient stalls. There are besides above 50 churches and chapels-of-ease within the limits of this parish, noticed under the several places named above, in which they are situated. The free grammar school founded by Queen Elizabeth was rebuilt in 1725, and has an interest in 13 scholarships founded in Brazenose College, Oxford, by Dr. Nowell in 1572. There are traces of a Roman road, which passed through the parish, and of Roman camps.

WHALLEY RANGE, a hmlt. in the par. and city of Manchester, hund. of Salford, co. Lancaster, 1½ mile S. of Manchester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, in the patron. of trustees. The church was built in 1849 by Harrison.

WHALSAY, an island belonging to the Shetland group, co. Orkney and Shetland, Scotland, 3 miles E. of the mainland of Shetland. It extends in length about 5 miles, with a breadth varying from a few furlongs to 2 miles. The surface is uneven, but for the most part in an excellent state of cultivation. The coast, which is rocky, is indented by creek and headland. The rocks are of a magnetic nature, inasmuch as the compasses of vessels are affected on approaching the island. Whalsay, with several neighbouring islets, once formed a parish, but now forms part of that of Nesting.

WHALTON, a par. in the W. div. of Castle ward, co. Northumberland, 5 miles S.W. of Morpeth, and 14 N.W. of Newcastle. The village is situated on the How Burns, a tributary of the river Blythe. The par. includes the tnshps. of East and West Ogle, Newham, Riplington, and Whalton. The soil is clay alternated with sand, on a subsoil of sandstone. There are quarries of freestone and limestone. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £750. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was restored in 1783. The register dates from 1649. The Wesleyans have a chapel and newsroom. There are British schools, partially endowed, and Sunday-schools. There are traces of a Roman encampment at a farm called Camphouse, and some slight remains of Ogle Castle, surrounded by a double foss.

WHAPLODE, a par. in the wap. of Elloe, parts of Holland, co. Lincoln, 2 miles W. of Holbeach, and 6 E. of Spalding. It is a station on the Holbeach and Lynn branch of the Great Northern railway. The village is situated near the river Welland, which flows through the northern part of the parish. It includes the chplry. of Whaplode, Drove, and the six manors of Whaplode Abbots, St. John of Jerusalem, Hagbeach, Kirk-fee, Knevits, and Pipewell. The soil consists of clay, silt, and rich loam. Irby Hall is now a farmhouse. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £600, in the patron of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is of the 13th century, recently restored, and in the interior is a monument, with effigies of Sir Anthony Irby and Alice, his wife, ancestors of the Lords Boston. The parochial charities produce about £20 per annum, including a small school endowment and Tash's almshouses for six widows.

The par. comprises the tnshps. of Whitburn and Cleadon, and the hmlt. of North Biddick. The village, which is a considerable fishing and bathing place, is situated about a quarter of a mile from the German Ocean, and commands a sea view. About a mile distant from the parish church is the village of Cleadon. The principal seats are Whitburn Hall and Farding Slade. The substratum abounds in limestone and coal. There are several mineral springs. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £1,113, in the patron. of the bishop. The Wesleyans have two chapels, and there are National schools. The local charities produce about £60 per annum, being the bequest of Dr. Triplett for apprenticing poor children. On the sea-shore several copper coins of Constantine and other Roman emperors have been found.

WHITBURN, a par. in co. Linlithgow, Scotland. It is a station on the Morningside branch of the North British railway. The par. contains a vil. of its own name, and that of Longridge, and part of the vil. of Blackburn. It extends in length about 6¼ miles from E. to W., with an extreme breadth of 4 miles, and is bounded on the N. by Lanarkshire and Bathgate, on the E. by Livingstone, on the S. by Edinburghshire, and on the W. by Lanarkshire. At the W. end, and nearly along its centre, is a lofty ridge of deep and barren moss, but elsewhere it is moderately even, and in an excellent state of cultivation. The par. is drained by the Almond Water and its tributary, the Briech Water. The rocks are all of the carboniferous formation, with veins of trap. Sandstone is quarried, and coal and ironstone are worked to a large extent. There are several mineral springs. The par. is traversed by the road from Linlithgow to Wilsonton, and by the S. road from Edinburgh to Glasgow. The village of Whitburn is about 2¾ miles S.W. of Blackburn, and 21 S.W. from Edinburgh. This par. is in the presb. of Linlithgow and synod of Lothian and Tweedale. The stipend of the minister is about £203. The parish church was erected in 1718, and is situated at the village of Whitburn. There are two Free churches respectively situated at Whitburn and Longridge, and an United Presbyterian church. There are also two public libraries and a parochial school. The principal seats are Polkemmet, Culthouse, Berryhill, and Mosshalt, in the N., and Burnhead, Crofthead, Craighead, and Fauldhouse in the S. This parish formed part of Livingstone till 1730.

WHITBY, a tnshp. in the pars. of Eastham and Stoke, higher div. of Wirrall hund., co. Chester, 6 miles N. of Chester. The village is situated near the Dee and Mersey canal, which here communicates with the river Mersey, on which are extensive docks and wharves.

WHITBY, a par., market town, seaport, and parliamentary borough in the libs. of Whitby-Strand and East Langbaurgh, North Riding co. York, 20 miles N.W. of Scarborough, and 44 N.E. of York by road, or 56½ by the Pickering branch of the N.E. railway. It is also the terminus of the North Yorkshire and Cleveland branch of the North Eastern railway. The par. includes the borough of Whitby, with the chplries. of Aislaby, Eskdaleside, and Ugglebarnby, and the tnshps. of Hawkser, Newholm, and Ruswarp. It is situated at the mouth of the river Esk, which flowing through the town here falls into the German Ocean, and is crossed by a bridge of three arches, with a cast-iron swivel bridge, constructed for the purpose of admitting ships into the inner harbour. It is supposed to be tho Dunum Sinus mentioned by Ptolemy, and was called by the Saxons Streonesheale, where Oswy, King of Northumbria, founded an abbey under St. Hilda in 657, at which a synod was held in 664 for determining Easter after the Roman style. A village on the cliff, of which there are still some traces, sprang up under the shelter of the abbey, but the latter being destroyed by the Danes under Hubba, who landed here in 876, the village first received the name of Presteby, or "priest town," and afterwards Whytebye or "white village," hence its modern name. After the Norman conquest the abbey was restored as a Benedictine priory by William de Percy, and at the Dissolution had a revenue of £437, at which time the town contained 40 houses. The ruins of this pile, situated on a rock 240 feet above the sea, include parts of the cruciform church, which was 300 feet long by 69 feet, or 150 through the transepts, and had a central tower 106 feet high supported upon four pillars of sixteen columns in the cluster, but which fell in 1830. The demesne of the ancient abbey was given by Henry VIII. to the Cholmleys of Honsham, whose mansion, Whitby Abbey, built out of the ruins of the old monastery, was taken by the Roundheads in 1645. There were also two other religious houses in the town, known as the White Hospital and St. John's. The town, which is divided into two nearly equal parts by the river Esk, consists of several narrow streets of old-fashioned houses of brick and stone. It contains the townhall, a substantial building of the Tuscan order, erected by the Cholmleys in 1788, and situated in the market-place, and the baths on the pier of three stories, the first containing the baths, the second the subscription library, and the third the museum of the Literary and Philosophical Society, containing specimens of the fossil crocodile, ichthyosauri, and other saurians, with which the cliffs abound; the custom-house, savings-bank, two commercial banks, the gas-house, seamen's hospital, dispensary, marine assurance clubs, and shipbuilding yards. The population of the parliamentary borough in 1851 was 10,989, and in 1861, 12,051, inhabiting 2,464 houses, but of the parish 14,014. It is one of the new boroughs created by the Reform Act of 1832, and returns one member to parliament. It is also a polling place for the North Riding, an excise collection, coastguard station, and bonding port. The magistrates for the North Riding hold petty sessions on Tuesday and Saturday weekly, and George Cholmley, Esq., who is lord of the manor, holds his court-leet annually at Michaelmas. The Whitby Poor-law Union comprises 22 parishes or places, the union poor-house being situated in the tnshp. of Hawsker-cum-Stainacre. It is also the head of the new County Court and Superintendent Registry districts. The inland trade of the port is considerable, but its prosperity is chiefly dependent on shipbuilding and the chartering of its numerous vessels. The manufacture of alum was established here in 1615 by the Cholmleys, and more recently the manufacture of jet ornaments has been introduced. The fisheries are prolific, and some of the working classes are employed in the weaving of canvas. There are also extensive patent roperies belonging to Messrs. Morgan of London. The harbour, which is tidal, and almost dries at low water, but rises at high tide from 10 to 15 feet, admitting vessels of 600 tons, is divided into the outer and inner harbours by the bridge. It has been much improved by the construction of the eastern and western piers, the former extending into the sea 645 feet, and the latter 1,560 feet, besides the old Burgess pier, built in 1632 by the Cholmleys, but the entrance is still rendered dangerous by the Whitby Scar, an extensive ledge of black rock near the Sledway passage, which is 300 yards broad. At the end of the W. pier is a light-house, put up in 1831, 83 feet high, with a fixed light, visible for 13 miles; and on the E. pier is another light-house, recently erected. The harbour is protected by a battery, and has Sandend and Robin Hood's Town for subports. The trade is in coal, timber, stone, alum, hemp, flax, and grain. Near 300 boats are constantly employed in the herring and other fisheries. The alum cliffs extend along the coast for nearly 30 miles, abounding in fossils, and attain an elevation of from 100 to 700 feet above the sea. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the archdeaconry of Cleveland and dioc. of York, val. £215, in the patron. of the archbishop, who is impropriator of the great tithes. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, was built about 1110. It stands on the summit of East Cliff, and is approached by an ascent of 194 stone steps. In the interior are monuments to the Cholmley, Lascelles, and Chapman families. There are besides two chapels-of-ease dedicated respectively to St. John and St. Michael, also an Episcopalian chapel. The Wesleyans, Independents, Baptists, Roman Catholics, Society of Friends, and Unitarians have chapels. There are National, British, and infant schools, and Boulby's almshouses. The local charities produce about £170 per annum. Races take place on the sands in the early part of September. Market day is on Saturday. Fairs are held on 25th August, and on Martinmas-day.

WHITBY-STRAND, a lib., North Riding co. York, contains part of the borough of Whitby and the pars. of Fylingdales, Hackness, and Sneaton, comprising 43,320 acres.

WHITCHESTER, a tnshp. in the par. of Heddon-on-the-Wall, co. Northumberland, 9 miles N.W. of Newcastle. Here was a Roman station, near which coins of Domitian, Antonine, and other emperors have been found. The demesne formerly belonged to the Turpins.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Caerphilly, co. Glamorgan, 3 miles N.W. of Cardiff. The village is situated in the Vale of the Taff, near the Merthyr canal and Taff Vale railway. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the tin-plate works of Melin Grufydd. The principal residences are Velindre and Greenmeadow. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £100, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

WHITCHURCH, or EGLWYS WEN, a hmlt. in the par. and co. of Denbigh, 1 mile E. of Denbigh.

WHITCHURCH, a par., decayed market town, and borough by prescription, in the hund. of Evingar, co. Hants, 12 miles N.E. of Winchester, and 59 S.W. of London. It is a station on the Andover and Basingstoke branch of the London and South-Western railway. The par. includes, besides the town of its own name, the tithgs. of Charlcott, Cold Henley, and Freefolk Priors. It is situated on the river Test, which has its rise about 6 miles distant in a range of chalk hills. It has a mechanics' institute, held at the townhall, a branch bank, a library at the church, and bank-note paper mills in the tything of Freefolk Priors. It is a polling place for the northern division of the county, and sent two members to parliament from the 27th of Queen Elizabeth till the passing of the Reform Act of 1832, by which it was disfranchised. It is a borough by prescription, not included in the Municipal Corporation Act, and is governed by a mayor and bailiff, elected annually by the freeholders at the court-leet of the Dean and Chapter of Winchester, to whom the manor belongs. The county court is held at Andover, and the union poorhouse is situated in the parish of Overton. The population of the parish in 1851 was 1,911, and in 1861, 1,962. Whitchurch Lodge is a meet for the Vine hounds. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £205, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There are chapels for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Baptists. There are National schools. The parochial charities produce about £100 per annum. Market day was on Friday, but is now disused. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in June, and on the 19th and 20th October.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Cottesloe, co. Bucks, 5 miles N.W. of Aylesbury, and 12 from Buckingham. The village is situated in a vale, over which passes the line of the London and North-Western railway. It was given by the Conqueror to the Giffards, and had a castle belonging to Hugh de Bolebec, of which there are some traces. The manor subsequently came to the Veres, who obtained the grant of a weekly market on Monday, and a fair on the festival of St. John the Baptist, but both have long been disused. The par. includes the small hmlt. of Creslow. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £120. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. The communion plate is of the 17th century, presented by Sir Edward Smythe, once Lord Chief Justice of Ireland. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel, and there is a school for boys and girls partly supported by the Wesleyans. The charities consist of some poors' cottages and a bequest of £15 per annum, which is distributed in clothes and blankets.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Roborough, co. Devon, 1½ mile S.E. of Tavistock, and 12 miles N. of Plymouth. The parish comprises a considerable extent of unenclosed land on the borders of Dartmoor. Slate is quarried, and there are several tin, copper, and lead mines, which have been worked at different periods, but the Tavistock United Tin Mine is the only one at present in operation. The village is situated on the road from Plymouth to Tavistock. The principal residences are Grenofen, Holwell, Grimston, Sortridge, and Walreddon House, the latter for many centuries a seat of the Courtenay family, descendants of the Earls of Devon. The Tavistock races are held on Whitchurch Down, in this parish. A chantry chapel was founded in 1300 by the Abbot of Tavistock. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £190. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Independents have a chapel, and there is a village school. Colonel Harris is lord of the manor.

WHITCHURCH, a div. of the hund. of North Bradford, co. Salop, contains the pars. of Ightfield, Lee-Brockhurst, Prees, Stanton-upon-Hine-Heath, and part of Whitchurch, comprising 36,340 acres.

WHITCHURCH, a par. and market town, chiefly in the Whitchurch div. of North Bradford hund., co. Salop, but partly in the hund. of Nantwich, co. Chester, 11 miles N.W. of Market-Drayton, 19 N.E. of Shrewsbury, and 20 S.W. of Chester. It has stations on the Cambrian and on the Crewe and Shrewsbury branch of the London and North-Western railways, and has water communication by means of a branch of the Ellesmere canal. In ancient times it was called Album Monasterium, or Blancminster, probably from an hospital founded in the reign of Henry II., and had an ancient castle near the mill. The par. includes, besides the town of its own name, the parochial districts of Ash and Tilstock, the vil. of Wirswall, and 14 tnshps. It is situated on the borders of Wales, from which it is separated by a stream called the Red Brook, and has three small lakes, called Osmere, Blackmere, and Brown Moss-water. The site of the town is on the old road from London to Chester. It contains the townhall, in the High-street, where a county court is held monthly; a savings-bank, two commercial banks, the National Provincial, and Whitchurch and Ellesmere; a police-station, inland revenue office, news-room, union workhouse, enlarged in 1855; working men's club, young men's institution, several insurance agencies and gas-works. The town has recently been much improved by the completion of the sewerage works. There are several breweries and maltings, an iron foundry and machine factory. The boot and shoe trade, formerly the staple, has much declined, but considerable business is done in malt, hops, and agricultural produce. The population of the parish in 1861 was 6,093, and of the town 3,704. The local government is administered by a high steward, appointed by the Earl of Brownlow, who is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £1,000. The church, dedicated to St. Alkmund, was rebuilt in 1713 on the site of an ancient Gothic edifice, and contains several monuments of the Earls of Shrewsbury, including an effigy in stone of John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, and Marshal of France in the reign of Henry VI., surnamed the English Achilles, who was slain in France in 1453. At Dodington is a chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Catherine, and at Ash and Tilstock are district churches. The free grammar school, founded by Sir John Talbot in 1550, and rebuilt in 1849, has an income from endowment of £500. There are also several National, infant, and mixed schools in various parts of the parish. The parochial charities produce above £1,000 per annum, including the school endowment and Higginson's bequest of £220 for the support of 6 almshouses. Whitchurch is a polling place for the county elections and a petty sessions town; it is also the seat of a new County Court and of a Poor-law Union. Courts leet and baron are held in October at the townhall by the lord of the manor. Market day is on Friday. Fairs are held on the second Friday in April, Monday in Whitsun week, Friday after 2nd August, and 28th October.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Lower Wormelow, co. Hereford, 6 miles S.W. of Ross, and 4 N.E. of Hereford. It is situated on the right bank of the river Wye, and on the road from Ross to Hereford. The scenery embraces Doward Hill, Symond's Yat, and other spots on the Wye. There is a private asylum for lunatics, called Whitchurch Asylum. Limestone is quarried on the hill of Great Doward, and the substratum contains ironstone, which was formerly worked. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £280. The church is dedicated to St. Dubritius. In the churchyard is the tomb of the Gwillams family. There are a chapel for Independents and a National school. The charities produce about £26 per annum.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Langtree, co. Oxford, 6 miles N.W. of Reading, and 10 from Wallingford. The village is situated on a declivity overlooking the Thames, and surrounded by hills. On the opposite bank of the river is the village of Pangbourne in Berkshire, connected with Whitchurch by a bridge rebuilt in 1853. The common was enclosed in the reign of George III. The par. includes the hmlt. of Whitchurch Tollhouse, Combe Lodge, the mansion of S.W. Gardiner, Esq., who is lord of the manor; and Hardwick House, the ancient seat of the Hardwick and Powys families, originally built prior to the reign of Richard II. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £456, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains three brasses, the earliest to Sir T. Walysch, bearing date 1430, and several tablets to the Lybbe, Powys, and Gardiner families. There is a free school for boys and girls, founded in 1817.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Dewisland co. Pembroke, 3 miles E. of St. David's. The par. includes the post-office village and small port of Solva, or Solfach, situated under the cliffs at the mouth of the Solfach river, which here falls into St. Bride's Bay. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £110, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. David's.

WHITCHURCH. See STANMORE PARVA, co. Middlesex.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the detached portion of Kington hund., co. Warwick, 4½ miles S.E. of Stratford-on-Avon, its nearest post town and railway station. It is situated near the river Stour, and includes the small hmlts. of Bruton, or Broughton, Crimscott, Wimpstone, and Whitchurch. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £340. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. J. R. West, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Keynsham, co. Somerset, 3 miles S.E. of Bristol. It is situated on the road from Bristol to Wells, and includes a forest tract called Fillwood Chase, now enclosed, on the border of which was an old town called Filton or Felton, a little to the N.W. of the present village. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £200. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

WHITCHURCH CANONICORUM, a hund. in the Bridport div. of co. Dorset, contains the pars. of Bridport, Burstock, Catherston Lewston, Charmouth, Chideock, Marshwood, Pilsdon, Symondsbury, Whitchurch Canonicorum, Stanton St. Gabriel, Wooton-Fitzpaine, and part of Stockland, comprising 22,020 acres, exclusive of the borough of Bridport.

WHITCHURCH CANONICORUM, a par. in the hund. of the same name, co. Dorset, 2 mile N.E. of Charmouth, and 5 N.W. of Bridport. It includes the chplry. of Wild, with the hmlts. of Chideock, where was situated a castle belonging to the Chideocks and Arundels, Berne, Wooton-Abbots, and Marshwood Vale. The village was formerly a market town, by grant of Henry III., and took its name from a monastery called Album Monasterium, which was dedicated to St. Candida, and at the time of the Domesday survey belonged to the abbey of St. Wandragisil in Normandy. The soil is deep and fertile, except in the vale, where it is a cold chalky clay. Many of the women and children are employed in making fishing-nets. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. with the curs. of Chideock, Stanton St. Gabriel, and Marshwood annexed, £800, in the patron. of the Bishop of Bath and Wells. The church, originally dedicated to St. Candida, and afterwards to the Holy Cross, contains a carved pulpit, the tomb of Sir G. Somers, and a monument to Sir J. Jeffery. A church has been erected at Stanton St. Gabriel in lieu of the old structure, and also at Marshwood to replace the chapel destroyed by Cromwell. There are chapels for the Baptists and Wesleyans, and National schools at Whitchurch and Chideock. The local charities produce about £25 per annum.

WHITCHURCH MAUND, a tnshp. in the par. of Bodenham, co. Hereford, 6 miles S.W. of Bromyard.

WHITEASIDE, a district in the par. of Grinton, North Riding co. York, 2 miles S.W. of Reeth, and 8 S.W. of Richmond.

WHITE-BROOK, a chplry. in the par. of Llandogo, co. Monmouth, 5 miles S.E. of Monmouth, on the river Wye, under Beacon Hill.

WHITECASTLE, a hmlt. in the par. of Inishowen, co. Donegal, Ireland, 5 miles N.E. of Muff, on Lough Foyle.

WHITECHAPEL, a par. and populous suburb of the metropolis, in the Tower div. of Ossulstone hund., and borough of the Tower Hamlets, co. Middlesex, 1½ mile E. of St. Paul's Cathedral.

WHITECHAPEL, a chplry. in the par. of Kirkham, hund. of Amounderness, co. Lancaster, 5 miles S.E. of Garstang.

WHITECHAPEL, a hmlt. in the par. of Birstal, West Riding co. York, 3 miles N.W. of Dewsbury.

WHITECHURCH, a par. in the bar. of North Naas, co. Kildare, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 3 miles N. of Naas, and 2 E. of Clane. The village is situated on the Grand Canal and the river Liffey. A priory of Carmelites is said to have stood here, and there are some traces of a castle. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Kildare, united with Kill. The church is in ruins.

WHITECHURCH, a par. in the bar. of Iffa and Offa West, co. Tipperary, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 3 miles S.W. of Cahir. It is situated on the road to Clonmel, under the Galtee mountains. The surface is mountainous. The woollen manufacture, formerly carried on, has become extinct. The living is a rect. and vic. in the dioc. of Lismore, forming part of the union of Tubrid. In the Roman Catholic arrangement it is the head of a union, called, from the village, Ballylooby. There are two private schools.

WHITECHURCH, a par. in the bar. of Decies-without-Drum, co. Waterford, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles W. of Dungarvon. The parish is situated on the main road from Waterford through Youghal to Cork. During the parliamentary war it was the scene of repeated hostilities, and has the ruins of Knockmoan Castle, dismantled by Cromwell in 1649, and of Kilmoan Castle. Limestone abounds on the lowlands, and on the high grounds freestone and green flagstone; manganese is also found at Cappagh, and at Carriglea is a stratum of pure black marble. It is watered by a feeder of the river Brickey, which rises in a small lake at Cappagh, and after turning a mill pursues a subterranean course for nearly two miles. In the limestone rocks are two extensive caverns, called Oon-na-glour and Oon-na-mort. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lismore, val. with Lickoran, £180. The church was built in 1831, by loan from the late Board of First Fruits. There is a Roman Catholic chapel, forming part of the union of Aglish. A fair is held on the 5th August.

WHITECHURCH, a par. in the bar. of Half-Rathdown, co. Dublin, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 5 miles S. of the General Post-office, Dublin, and 2 S. of Rathfarnham. The surface in the S. is chiefly hilly pasture, forming the base of the northern range of the Dublin and Wicklow mountains, whence the Cruagh river and another stream take their rise and join the Dodder at Rathfarnham. The northern part is fertile and well cultivated. The military road through the county of Wicklow passes by the villages of Ballyboden, Edmondstown, and Rockbrook. At Larch Hill is a Druidical circle, with an altar or cromlech in the centre, and in the park at Little Dargle are the ruins of a cromlech; at Kilmashogue Mountain is a strong chalybeate spring. The hills abound in granite, which is quarried and sent to Dublin for building purposes. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Dublin, val. £70, the remainder of the tithes being partly appropriated to the deanery of Christ Church, Dublin, and partly to the incumbent of Tallaght, to which the living was until recently annexed. The church was erected in 1826. The old church, which has a burial-ground attached to it, stands on an eminence about half a mile distant, and is in ruins. In the Roman Catholic arrangement the parish forms part of the union of Rathfarnham. There are a school-house and a Moravian cemetery near the church.

WHITECHURCH, a par. in the bar. of Iverk, co. Kilkenny, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 2 miles N.E. of Carrick-on-Suir. It is situated on the river Linaan, or Lingan, near its junction with the Suir. Limestone is abundant. The living is a rect. and vic. in the dioc. of Ossory, val. £200, in the patron. of the crown and bishop. The church was erected by Archbishop Cox. In the Roman Catholic divisions the parish forms part of the union of Templeorum. There are ruins of Kilcleran and Killonery churches; and a dispensary and several schools.

WHITECHURCH, or EGLWYS-WEN, a par. in the hund. of Kemess, co. Pembroke, 6 miles S.W. of Cardigan. The surface is hilly, but the soil fertile, upon a substratum of limestone. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £120. The church is dedicated to St. Michael.

WHITECHURCH, or TEMPLEGALL, a par. partly in the bars. of Fermoy and East Muskerry, co. Cork, but chiefly in the co. of the city of Cork, prov. of Munster, Ireland, 5 miles N.W. of Cork. The parish is situated on the road from Cork to Limerick. The land is generally cold, and the soil light, resting on a substratum of clay slate, but has been recently much improved by drainage and the application of manure. The land is chiefly under tillage, but there are some large dairy farms. On the western boundary of the parish are the Monard iron-works, an extensive manufactory for agricultural implements, and a dye-wood mill worked by a stream. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Cloyne, val. £700, in the patron. of the bishop. The church was rebuilt in 1800. There is a Roman Catholic chapel included in the union or district of Garrycloyne, or Blarney, and near the chapel is a tower, erected in 1834, in imitation of the ancient round towers of Ireland. There are parochial, private, and Sunday schools.

WHITECHURCH, a par. in the bars. of Bantry and Shelburne, co. Wexford, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 4 miles S.W. of New Ross. It is situated on the Ross or Barrow river, under Slievekieltre Hill, a lofty eminence, partly in this parish, where the insurgents, under the Rev. Philip Roche, encamped in 1798, and succeeded in destroying a gun brig lying off Pilltown. The land is chiefly under tillage, and the system of agriculture has in particular instances been brought to a high state of perfection. The living is a rect. and vic. in the dioc. of Ferns, united to that of Kilmokea, constituting the corps of the Prebend of Whitechurch in the cathedral of Ferns.

WHITECHURCHGLYNN, a par. in the bars. of Bantry and West Shelmaliere, co. Wexford, Ireland, 4 miles N.E. of Tagmon. The parish lies near the river Slaney. The living is a cur. in the dioc. of Ferns, annexed to Killurin. The church is in ruins.

WHITE CLIFT, a hmlt. in the par. of Monk's Risborough, co. Bucks.

WHITE CRAGG, a hmlt. in the par. of Fewston, West Riding co. York, 5 miles N. of Otley, on the river Washburn.

WHITE CROSS, a hmlt. in the par. of Upper Fews, co. Armagh, Ireland, 4 miles N.E. of Newtown Hamilton.

WHITEFAUGH, a hmlt. in the par. of Carrington, co. Edinburgh, Scotland, 3 miles S. of Lasswade.

WHITEFIELD, a hmlt. in the par. of Deerhurst, co. Gloucester, 3 miles S.W. of Tewkesbury. It is joined with Apperley to form a township.

WHITEFIELD, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Pilkington, par. of Prestwich-cum-Oldham, co. Lancaster, 2 miles S.E. of Bury, and 6 N.W. of Manchester.

WHITEFIELD, EAST and WEST, tythgs. in the par. of Wiveliscombe, co. Somerset, 1 mile N. of Wiveliscombe.

WHITEGATE, or NEWCHURCH, a par. in the first div. of Eddisbury hund., co. Chester, 4 miles S.W. of Northwich, its post town, and 2 from the Hartford station on the Grand Junction line of the London and North-Western railway. It is situated on the western bank of the river Weaver, and contains the tnshps. of Darnhall and Marton, and parts of Over and Weaverham. Vale Royal, the seat of Lord Delamere, stands on the site of the old abbey, occupying an elevation overlooking the valley of the Weaver. The old Hall, rebuilt by the Holcrofts in the reign of Elizabeth, suffered considerably during the Civil War, but has since been restored and considerably altered. It has some old stained glass, chiefly heraldic, brought from the Hall at Utkinton, and contains a collection of portraits and paintings, some of which are by Rubens. Merton Grange has been taken down, but the farm, with several other granges in this parish, still enjoys prescriptive privileges, having formed part of the possessions of the abbey of Vale Royal. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1726. The register dates from 1565. There is a school for both sexes, supported by Lord Delamere. The manor of Darnhall formerly belonged to the Earls of Chester, but now to T. G. Corbett, Esq., who is sole landowner. The local charities produce about £24 per annum.

WHITEGATE, a post-office vil. in the bar. of Imokilly, co. Cork, Ireland, 5 miles S.W. of Cloyne. It is chiefly inhabited by fishermen, and gives name to a small bay on the south-eastern side of Cork Harbour.

WHITEHALL, a vil. in the bar. of Gowran, co. Kilkenny, Ireland, 4 miles S.W. of Leighlinsbridge.

WHITEHALL, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Peter's, Stronsay, Orkney Islands, coast of Scotland, on the north-western side of the island.

WHITEHALL, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Lawrence, Isle of Thanet, co. Kent, 2 miles from Ramsgate.

WHITEHALL, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Decuman, co. Somerset, 2 miles from Watchet.

WHITEHALL, a hmlt. in the par. of Ross, hund. of Greytree, co. Hereford, 2 miles S. of Ross, and 12 S.E. of Hereford, on an acclivity overlooking the Wye.

WHITEHAVEN, a tnshp., market town, seaport, and parliamentary borough in the par. of St. Bees, ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 12 miles S.W. of Maryport, and 40 S.W. of Carlisle. It is the terminus of three short lines of railway, the Whitehaven and Furness Junction, the Whitehaven, Cleator, and Egremont, and the Whitehaven Junction. The town has grown up since the middle of the 17th century through the exertions of the Lowther family, who founded the coal trade here in 1666, and laid out the harbour. In 1778 it was attempted to be taken by Paul Jones, a native of Galloway, who had served his apprenticeship as a seaman in a vessel belonging to this port, but took service on board an American privateer, the Ranger, and landing with about 30 armed men, fired three of the ships in the harbour. The harbour, which dries at low water, and rises 10 to 18 feet, has recently been much improved by the erection of the North and West Piers; the former executed by Rennie, in 1841, is 1,800 feet long, with a lighthouse, or harbour guide, at the extremity; and the latter is 1,350 feet long, bending to the E., with a fixed, or harbour light, put up in 1821; extending northwards from this pier is the New West Pier, a massive structure about 900 feet in length, having at its head a lighthouse, with a revolving light and three reflectors. There is another half-tide lighthouse on one of the inner piers, which serve to break the force of the sea, and together with the commodious quays are chiefly used for the transit and shipping of coal and iron ore. The number of vessels belonging to this port in 1856 was 177, of an aggregate tonnage of 27,757, and employing 1,455 men. Steamers ply regularly from here to Belfast and Liverpool. The herring fishery is on the decline. The quantity of coal exported is 250,000 tons, principally to Ireland. Shipbuilding is carried on to some extent, and there is a patent slip on the East Strand, erected by the Earl of Lonsdale to carry vessels of 150 tons. The town is well planned, being laid out in regular streets, mostly crossing at right angles. King-street is the principal business street; it is paved, and lighted with gas by two companies. The town is well supplied with water from Ennerdale Lake, the pipes being laid underground for ten miles. The principal buildings are the townhall, in Duke-street, containing assembly rooms and rooms for the meetings of the trustees of the town and harbour, to whom the building belongs; market-house, built by Smirke in 1813; custom-house, built in 1811, on the West Strand; the union workhouse, built in 1856, on the St. Bees road: the Whitehaven and West Cumberland Infirmary, a large stone structure, in Howgill-street; the county police-station and lock-up, in Scotch-street; county court house, in Sandhill-lane; mechanics' institute, in Queen-street; public baths, on the West Strand; theatre, built in 1769; barracks, in Mill-street; old public office, in Duke-street, now used as reading-rooms; subscription library, savings-bank, two commercial branch banks, race stand, and Whitehaven Castle, on the road to Egremont, and now a residence of the Earl of Lonsdale. The borough, which was created by the Reform Act of 1832, includes the tnshp. of Whitehaven and part of Preston Quarter, and returns one member to parliament. It is governed by the town and harbour trustees, 21 in number, aided by constables and other municipal officers. It is also a polling place for the western division of the county. The county court is held monthly, and petty sessions thrice a week, on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday. The board of guardians meet weekly on Thursday for the poor-law of Whitehaven, which embraces 20 parishes. Two old-established newspapers are published weekly, viz., the Cumberland Pacquet, on Tuesday, and the Whitehaven Herald, on Saturday, besides two penny newspapers weekly. The horticultural and agricultural societies hold their exhibitions annually. The population in 1851 was 18,916, inhabiting 3,627 houses, and in 1861, 18,842, inhabiting 3,751 houses. The chief industries are connected with the shipping trade, collieries, and iron mines, large quantities of ore being exported for the Welsh and Staffordshire furnaces, and pig iron from the Hematic ironworks, the demand for which has greatly increased of late years. Other manufactures of the town are cotton weaving, flax spinning, rope and sail making, iron foundries, anchor, cable, and nail factories, earthenware, bricks, tiles, and cabinet ware. The substratum on which the town stands belongs to the New Red sandstone formation, with extensive beds of iron ore and rich seams of cannel and other coal from 2 to 11 feet thick. The collieries at present in operation are worked by shafts at the Harris, James, Lady Kill, William, and other pits, varying in depth from 50 to 150 fathoms, and running two or three miles under the sea. There are four churches, St. Nicholas, Holy Trinity, St. James's, and Christ Church, varying in value from £350 to £150. St. James's and St. Nicholas have lately been made vicarages. Whitehaven is in the diocese of Carlisle. There are also chapels for Wesleyans, Wesleyan Association and Primitive Methodists, Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and Society of Friends. The principal schools are the marine school, founded in 1816 by M. Piper, for the education of 60 boys, which has an income from endowment of about £90, and was rebuilt in 1820 by the late Earl of Lonsdale; the refuge school, built in 1852, for the free education of 100 boys and girls; a ragged school and reading room in Cater-street, in the parish of St. James; Whitehaven National schools, in Wellington-row; and the Earl of Lonsdale's colliery school, at the Ginns; besides National and infant schools, in connection with the several district churches. The local charities produce about £31 per annum, exclusive of school endowments. An extramural cemetery has been formed on the St. Bees road. Market days are Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, for provisions, the last being also for corn. A fair is held on 12th August.

WHITEHILL, a vil. in the par. of Dalkeith, co. Edinburgh, Scotland. It consists of several cottages, inhabited chiefly by colliers.

WHITEHILL, a vil. in the par. of St. Cyrus, co. Kincardine, Scotland, adjoining the vil. of Lochside.

WHITEHILL, a vil. in the par. of Kirkconnel, co. Dumfries, Scotland, near Sanquhar.

WHITEHILLS, a vil. in the par. of Boyndie, co. Banff, Scotland, 2½ miles N.W. of Banff, and 4 E. of Portsoy. It is situated near Knock Head, and has a small harbour with 11 feet of water at spring tides. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the fisheries.

WHITEHOUSE, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Abbey Lands, par. of Alnwick, co. Northumberland, 3 miles N.W. of Alnwick.

WHITEHOUSE, ABBEY, LOWER, and UPPER, three vils. in the bar. of Lower Belfast, co. Antrim, Ireland, 3 miles N. of Belfast. The Belfast and Carrickfergus section of the Belfast and Northern Counties railway has a station here. The inhabitants are employed in the cotton mills and printworks of R. Grimshaw, of Whitehouse Hall. There is a coastguard station, and a police station where petty sessions are held.

WHITEHOUSE, a post-office vil. in the district and co. of Aberdeen, Scotland, 3 miles from Alford. It is a station on the Alford Valley branch of the Great North of Scotland railway.

WHITEHOUSES, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Bishopside, par. of Ripon, West Riding co. York, 2 miles from Pateley-Bridge, on the river Nidd.

WHITEKIRK AND TYNNINGHAM, an united par. in the co. of Haddington, Scotland. It comprises the ancient pars. of Aldham, Hamer, or Whitekirk, and Tynningham. It extends in length about 5 miles from N. to S., with an extreme breadth of 4½ miles, and is bounded by North Berwick on the N., by the German Ocean on the E., by the estuary of the Tyne and Dunbar on the S., and by Prestonkirk on the W. The principal elevations are Whitekirk Hill, on the northern border, and Lawhead in the S., which do not exceed 250 feet above sea-level. Binning Wood was planted on a bare spot with oak, ash, beech, elm, and firs, in 1707. The coast, which begins a little N. of the Peffer, is rocky and bluff, in some parts reaching an altitude of 100 feet above sea-level. The rocks chiefly consist of trap and sandstone. The parish is traversed by the roads from Dunbar to North Berwick, and from Edinburgh to Berwick, and is within easy access of the East Linton station, on the North British railway. The village of Whitekirk is about 9 miles N.E. of Haddington, and 4 S.E. of North Berwick. It is situated on the rivers Tym and Peffer, under Whitekirk Hill and Whitberry Point, opposite the Bass rock. This par. is in the presb. of Dunbar and synod of Lothian and Tweeddale. The stipend of the minister is about £337. The parish church, erected in the latter part of the 15th century, was formerly dedicated to the Virgin, and is the place where the widow of James I. outwitted Chancellor Crichton by carrying off her son, James II., in a box to Stirling. There are two parochial schools. The principal seats are Tynningham, Newbyth, and Seacliff Houses.

WHITELETS, a vil. in the par. of St. Quinox, co. Ayr, Scotland, 1½ mile N.E. of Ayr. A railway for the traffic of coal connects the village with the harbour of Newton-upon-Ayr. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the collieries.

WHITFIELD, a par. in the W. div. of Tindale ward, co. Northumberland, 4 miles S.E. of Haltwhistle, 14 S.W. of Hexham, and 8 S.W. of Haydon Bridge railway station. It is watered by the East and West Allen rivers, which join their streams at Cupola, and is traversed by the new turnpike road from Alston to Haydon Bridge. Two-thirds of the surface are high, heathy, uninclosed moorland, only affording pasturage to sheep, but the lands along the Allen are fertile, and are appropriated chiefly to dairy and grazing farms. At Redmires is a chalybeate spring. There are traces of lead, which was formerly worked, also a small brick and tile kiln. The manor anciently belonged to the Whitfields, who held it under the collegiate church of Hexham, and were styled "earls" by custom; it is now the property of Mrs. Blackett Ord, of Whitfield Hall. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £300. The church was rebuilt in 1784. The charities produce about £7 per annum. There are National schools.

WHITFORD, a par. in the hund. of Coleshill, co. Flint, 3 miles N.W. of Holywell. The par., situated on Offa's Dyke, near the river Dee and the Chester and Holyhead railway, which has stations at Holywell and Mostyn, includes the tnshp. of Whitford-Garn; Mostyn Hall, the seat of Lord Mostyn; Bychton, the original seat of the Pennants; Downing, a seat of the Earl of Denbigh; Ucha, of the Griffiths; and the hmlts. of Eden Owen, Is Glan, Uwch Glan, Tre-Abbot, and Tre-Llan, where is situated the parish church. The population in 1861 was 3,666. The subsoil yields abundance of coal, which is worked under the sea, limestone, lead, copper, zinc, calamine, chert, and freestone. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £400, besides a sinecure rect., val. £740, both in the gift of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Near Mynydd-y-Garreg are a Roman tower, and a pillar cross 12 feet high. The charities produce £140 per annum.

WHITGIFT, a par. in the lower div. of Osgoldcross wap., West Riding co. York, 6 miles S.E. of Howden, and 4 E. of Goole. The par. is situated on the banks of the river Ouse, near its confluence with the Trent and Humber, and contains the tnshps. of Ousefleet, Reedness, Whitgift, and Swinefleet, which last is also a chapelry and large village, with church and schools. The population of the parish in 1861 was 2,298, but of the township only 315. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of York, val. £270, and 90 acres of glebe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was erected in 1302, on land given by Henry de Laci, Earl of Lincoln. There is besides a chapel-of-ease at Swinefleet. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are National schools at Whitgift and Swinefleet. The charities produce about £130 per annum. Fairs are held on the 22nd and 23rd July, and a statute fair at Michaelmas.

WHITGREAVE, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of SS. Mary and Chadd, co. Stafford, 3½ miles N.W. of Stafford. It is a small village situated near the line of the London and North-Western railway, containing only 182 inhabitants.

WHITHORN, a par., market town, and royal burgh, in the Machers district of Wigtonshire, Scotland. The par. contains, besides the town of its own name, the seaport village of Isle-of-Whithorn. It is bounded on the S. and S.E. by the sea, on the N. by Sorbie, and on the W. by Glasserton. It is about 8 miles in length from N. to S., with an extreme breadth of 4 miles. The coast is bold and rocky, terminating in the S. in Borrowhead, which separates the bays of Luce and Wigton. The surface is broken, seldom rising into hills, and occasionally overgrown with stunted brushwood, though timber-trees are rare except in the neighbourhood of Castlewigg demesne. The soil is fertile and under tillage, with the exception of a small extent of bog and moss, which is useful in supplying turf-fuel. The principal landed proprietors are the Earls of Galloway and Stair, Hathorn of Castlewigg, Stewart of Physgill and Tonderghie, Murray of Broughton, and Sir A. Agnew, Bart. The town consists of one main street nearly a mile in length, with two small streets branching from it, and several alleys. It contains a town-house and a gaol, with a spire, branches of the National and Edinburgh and Glasgow banks, and a bridge over the stream which crosses the main street. It is about 12 miles S. of Wigton, and has a considerable coasting-trade, chiefly with England. The burgh is governed by a provost, two bailiffs, a treasurer, and 5 common-councillors, assisted by a resident justice of the peace. It unites with Wigton, Stranraer, and New Galloway in returning one member to parliament; constituency in 1851, 1,652. The par. is in the presb. of Wigton and synod of Galloway, and in the patron. of the crown. The minister's stipend is £265 4*s.* 10*d.* The parish church was built in 1822, and there are two Free churches, respectively at Whithorn and Isle-of-Whithorn; also an United Presbyterian church, Reformed Presbyterian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are two parochial and nine other schools. Market-day is Thursday. Fairs are held on the Thursday after the first Friday in each month for cattle, and an annual fair on the Thursday after the first Saturday in July.

WHITKIRK, a par. in the lower div. of Skyrack wap., West Riding co. York, 4 miles E. of Leeds. It has a station at Crossgates on the Leeds and Selby line of railway. The par. includes the tnshp. of Austhorpe, Temple Newsham, Thorpe Stapleton, and Seacroft, recently erected into a separate parish under Lord Blandford's Act, and the hmlts. of Crossgates, Colton, Halton, Killingbeck, Lane End, Newsham-Green, and Temple-Thorpe. The manor of Temple Newsham, mentioned in Domesday survey as Newhusum, was given in the 12th century by William de Villers to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory here, and upon the suppression of that order was given by Edward III. to the Darcys, and subsequently came to Matthew, Earl of Lenox, during whose residence here Henry Lord Darnley, husband of Mary Queen of Scots, was born. The land is fertile and well cultivated. The substratum abounds in coal and ironstone, which are chiefly worked in the township of Thorpe-Stapleton. The population of the parish in 1861 was 3,032, principally located in the villages of Whitkirk, Temple Newsham, Seacroft, and Crossgates. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £200, in the patron. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The pulpit is in Caen stone, and adjoining the S. aisle is a mortuary chapel, with sculptured effigies of the Scargill and Ingram families, and a monument to John Smeaton, founder of the Eddystone lighthouse, who was a native of Austhorpe in this parish. There is besides a new church at Seacroft, erected in 1845. There are National and other schools. The charities produce about £35 per annum.

WHITLAND, a vil. in the par. of Llanboidy, co. Carmarthen, 8 miles N.W. of Langharne. It is a station on the Great Western railway. The village is situated on the river Taff, and is celebrated by tradition as the site of "Ty Gwyn ar Tav," or the White House of Howel Dha, where that sage, assisted by 13 wise men, composed the laws of Wales in the early part of the 10th century. The Abbey, the seat of the Yelvertons, was built out of the ruins of a Cistercian priory, founded here in 1143 by Bishop Bernard, and valued at the Dissolution at £135.

The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £180, in the alternate patron. of the Chapter of Llandaff and the Provost of Eton College. The church is said to have belonged to Portown, a place now swallowed up by the sea.

WHITSTABLE, a hund. in the lathe of St. Augustine, E. div. of co. Kent, contains the pars. of Blan, Seasalter liberty, and Whitstable, comprising 10,670 acres.

WHITSTABLE, a par., seaport, and market-town in the hund. of the same name, co. Kent, 6 miles N.W. of Canterbury, to which it is the harbour, and 7 N.E. of Faversham, to which it is a subport. It has stations on the Ramsgate and Deal branch of the South-Eastern, and on the Kent Coast branch of the London, Chatham, and Dover railways. It is situated on Whitstable Bay, near the entrance to the East Swale, opposite to the Isle of Sheppey. It is chiefly famed for its oyster fishery. It formed part of Seasalter borough at the time of the Domesday survey, when it had 8 fisheries, which, being appendant to the manor, were considered a royalty of fishery or oyster dredging, and now belong to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury, and are under the control and management of the Incorporated Company of Dredgers. The town has a bustling and thriving aspect, owing chiefly to its fishery, and the number of colliers frequenting the bay for the supply of Canterbury and the surrounding district with coal. The population, which is partly in Whitstable and partly in Seasalter parishes, in 1861 was 4,188, but that of the parish 3,673. The par. includes the hmlts. of Church Street, Whitstable Street, and part of Harwick. On the shore are several salt works, and near Tankerton are establishments for the manufacture of copperas, or green vitriol. There are weirs in the bay, which is a coastguard station. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £160, in the gift of the archbishop. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is on a hill in the hamlet of Church Street. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels. The Whitstable and Seasalter Trust schools are situated near the new church in the adjoining parish of Seasalter. In Tankerton Bay, about a mile out at sea, is a bank called the Street Stones, where are ancient remains, and on the Whitstable Flats, opposite, Roman tiles and coins have been found by the dredgers, together with the bones of the extinct elephant. Fairs are held on the Thursday before Whitsunday, on Midsummer-day at Church Street, and on St. James's day on Greensted Green, in Whitstable Street.

WHITTINGHAM, a par. in the wap. of North Coquetdale, co. Northumberland, 6 miles N. of Rothbury, and 8 S.W. of Alnwick. It is situated in the vale of the Aln, and contains the tnshps. of Callaley and Yetlington, Glanton, Lorbottle, Ryle, and Shawdon. The soil varies from a deep rich loam in the centre of the vale, to a light sand on the sides of the hills. A considerable portion of the land is uninclosed. In the parish is a vaulted tower, which served as a stronghold in the border wars. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £540, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew.

WHITTINGHAM, a par. in co. Haddington, Scotland. It contains a vil. of the same name. It extends in length about 10½ miles from N. to S. with a varying breadth of 1½ mile to over 6 miles. It is bounded by Berwickshire on the S, and on the other sides by the pars. of Garvald, Morham, Prestonkirk, Stenton, and Dunbar. The surface in the S. abounds in hilly sheep-walks, including part of the Lammermoor hills, from the foot of which to Whittingham Water the ground gradually descends. The principal summit in the N. is Blakie-heugh, a fertile ridgy height on the boundary. The prevailing rocks are greywacke and red sandstone, the latter having been extensively quarried. In this parish are Priest's Law oval camp, measuring 2,000 feet in circumference; the ruins of Whittingham Castle, and Penshiel and Stoneypath towers. The parish is traversed by the road from Gifford to Dunbar, and by that from Haddington to Dunse, and is within 2 miles of the Linton station on the North British railway. The village of Whittingham is about 6 miles E. of Haddington, and 7 S.W. of Dunbar. It is situated on the road from Gifford to Dunbar, on the left bank of Whittingham Water, and stands at an elevation of 300 feet above sea-level. This par. is in the presb. of Dunbar, and synod of Lothian and Tweeddale. The stipend of the minister is about £308. The parish church was erected about 1722, and restored in 1820. There is a parochial school. The principal seats are Whittingham House, Ruchlaw House, and Whittingham Castle.

It has stations on the Cambrian and on the Shrewsbury and Chester branch of the Great Western railways. There is likewise a branch line from Gobowen, in this parish, to Oswestry. The river Perry and the Ellesmere canal traverse the parish from N. to S. It has the ruins of an ancient moated border castle, supposed to have been built in the 9th century by a British chieftain, whose descendants held it till the Norman conquest, when it was given to Peverel, the founder of the family of the Peverels of the Peak, but afterwards passed into the hands of Fulk Fitz-Guarine, or Warine, whose family kept it till 1419. The castle, before its demolition, was strongly fortified with five round towers, each 40 feet in diameter and 100 feet in height, and the walls were 12 feet in thickness. The towers of the gatehouse are still entire, with some portions of the walls and towers of the castle. The par. includes the tnshps. of Berghill, Daywell, Ebnall, Fernhill, Frankton, Henlle, Hindford, Old Marton, and Whittington, with the hmlts. of Babies' Wood and Gobowen, and contains at present a population of about 1,500. The village was once a market town, and now contains about 500 inhabitants. In the parish are Belmont, Ebnall Lodge, Fernhill, and Park Hall, the last of the time of Henry VIII., with a private chapel, said to have been consecrated by Archbishop Parker. The Hulston estate also lies in the centre of the parish, but is now a separate parish. A portion of the eastern side of the parish was in 1865 formed into a separate district, embracing also a part of Ellesmere parish. The district church is called St. Andrew's, and the new district Welsh Frankton. Another portion of the tnshp. of Daywell, to the N.W. of the parish, has also been severed, having been assigned to the Hengoed district, the church of which was built in, and the chief part of the district taken from, the parish of Selattyn. The subsoil is principally gravel with traces of coal. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £965, with 50 acres of glebe. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was rebuilt in 1806. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are National schools built at a cost of £1,000, which are partly supported by an endowment of £42 per annum. Mrs. Lloyd, of Aston Hall, is lady of the manor.

WHITTINGTON, a par. in the S. div. of the hund. of Lonsdale, co. Lancaster, 5 miles E. of Burton, and 12 N.E. of Lancaster. The par., bordering on the river Lune, includes the tnshps. of Docker and Newton. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £420. The charities produce about £45, including Margison's bequest of £18 for education.

WHITTLEBURY, or WHITTLEWOOD, a par. in the hund. of Green's Norton, co. Northampton, 3½ miles S.W. of Towcester. The village is situated on the road from Towcester to Buckingham, near Whittlebury Forest, which stretches into the adjoining counties of Bucks and Oxfordshire, forming part of the honour of Grafton. Above a fourth of the land is in meadow and pasture, another quarter is arable, and the remainder chiefly forest and woodland. Some of the females are employed in lacemaking. The principal residence is Whittlebury Lodge, situated in the forest, the seat of Lord Southampton. The Duke of Grafton, of Wakefield Lodge, is lord-warden of the forest and lord of the manor. The living is a perpet. cur., with that of Silverstone, in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £380, in the patron. of the crown. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has been recently restored, and contains an old octagonal font embellished with the crest of the Fitzroys. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there are National schools. The local charities produce about £35 per annum, including £20 for education.

WHITTLE-LE-WOODS, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. and hund. of Leyland, co. Lancaster, 2 miles N. of Chorley, on the Leeds canal. There are quarries of millstone and traces of lead, but the mine is no longer in operation.

WHITTLESEY, a par. and ancient market town in the N. div. of Witchford hund., Isle of Ely, co. Cambridge, 6 miles S.E. of Peterborough, in Northamptonshire, and 20 N.W. of Ely. It is a station on the Peterborough, March, and Ely branch of the Great Eastern railway. This place, called Witesie in Domesday survey, is supposed to have been a Roman station, from the traces of a military way and the numerous relics of antiquity discovered in the neighbourhood, including a massive gold ring lately dug up. It consists of the two ancient parishes of St. Andrew and St. Mary, which have been united for civil purposes by special Act of Parliament of the 12th and 13th Victoria, though ecclesiastically still distinct. They consist of an extensive tract of fenny land, comprising 25,430 acres, and include the hmlts. of Coates, Eastrea, and Pond's Bridge. The lake or mere of Whittle, from which the place derives its name, was situated in the adjoining county of Huntingdon, and measured 2 miles in length by 1 mile broad, but is now entirely drained by the Middle Level Commissioners. The town, which is paved and lighted with gas, contains a townhall erected by the governors of the charities, the old market house, two branch banks, a library with news-room, two reading-rooms, and union workhouse. It has recently been much improved, and is bounded on the N. and S. by two branches of the Nene river. It is a polling place for the county elections, and has a market for corn recently revived. The population of the town in 1861 was 4,496, and of the parishes 6,966. It forms a separate Poor-law Union, but is included in the county court district of Peterborough. Courts leet and baron are held twice a year. The livings of both parishes are vics.* in the dioc. of Ely, that of St. Andrew val. £550, and that of St. Mary £230, with residences. The register dates from 1683. Coates and Pond's Bridge are distinct parishes. The Wesleyans, New Connexion Methodists, Independents, and General and Particular Baptists have chapels. There are two handsome National schools. The local charities produce about £520 per annum, including the revenues from town lands. Friday is market day. The town and neighbourhood are most salubrious, all traces of fen peculiarities of climate having disappeared by the system of drainage.

WHITTLESFORD, a hund. in the S. div. of co. Cambridge, contains the pars. of Duxford, Hinxton, Ickleton, Sawston, and Whittlesford, comprising 10,928 acres.

WHITTLESFORD, a par. in the hund. of the same name, co. Cambridge, 6 miles N.W. of Linton, and 7 S.E. of Cambridge. It is a station on the Cambridge section of the Great Eastern railway. The village, once a market town, is situated at the bridge over the river Cam. There are some traces of an hospital founded by Sir William Colville about the time of Edward I. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £170, in the patron. of Jesus College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to SS. Mary and Andrew. The local charities produce about £160 per annum, including £60, the endowment of Westley's school.

WHITWICK, a par. and small market town in the hund. of West Goscote, co. Leicester, 5 miles E. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, and 1½ mile from the Coalville station on the Leicester and Burton railway. The parish is situated on the border of Charnwood Forest, containing the tnshps. of Swannington, Thringstone, and Whitwick, and the manor of Bardon Hill, from the summit of which, it is said, 500 churches may be seen on a clear day. The town received the grant of a market in 1288, which, after having long fallen into disuse, has been again revived. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the collieries, and some in the manufacture of hosiery. At a little distance from the church are traces of Whitwick Castle, formerly belonging to the Earls of Lancaster; and at Grace Dieu, an ext. par. lib. near the western extremity of Charnwood Forest, is the seat and park of A. L. P. de Lisle, Esq., diversified with rugged granite rocks, on the summits of which are several Gothic chapels, and a crucifix 17 feet high, called the rock of Calvary. The living is a vic. in the archdeac. of Leicester and dioc. of Peterborough, val. £400, in the patron. of the Duchy of Lancaster. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was well restored in the year 1849, when the present vicar, the Rev. S. Smith, D.D., was curate in sole charge. Besides the parish church, there is a chapel-of-ease, St. Andrew's, built in 1862; also a district church, St. George's, which accommodates parts of the townships of Swannington and Thringstone. St. George's is worth £140 a-year, and is in the patron. of the vicar. The larger part of the new district of Coalville, and parts of the forest districts of the Oaks and Copt Oak, are in the parish of Whitwick. There is also a Roman Catholic monastery of the Cistercian order of the monks of La Trappe, called St. Bernard's Abbey, not far from which is a Roman Catholic reformatory. There are in the parish also chapels for the use of the Roman Catholics, the Wesleyans, the Baptists, and the Primitive Methodists. The National schools are erected opposite the market-place. The population of the parish, which in 1801 was 2,206, and in 1831 3,368, is now more than 7,000. The population of the township of Whitwick, exclusive of Swannington and Thringstone, which in 1801 was 817, and in 1831 1,552, is now nearly 4,000. Wednesday is the market day, under the charter of 1288, but, since the rapid increase of the population, a well-attended market has sprung up also on Saturday afternoons. The Marquis of Hastings is lord of the manor.

WHITWOOD, a tnshp. in the par. of Featherstone, lower div. of Agbrigg wap., West Riding co. York, 4½ miles N.W. of Pontefract. It is situated near the river Calder, and has an extensive manufactory of earthenware at Mere, and glass-bottle works.

WICK, a par., seaport, market town, royal and parliamentary burgh, in co. Caithness, Scotland. The par. contains, besides the town of its own name, which may be considered the political capital of Caithness-shire, the suburban towns of Louisburgh and Pulteneytown, the vils. of Ackergill, Keiss, Sarclet, and Staxigoe. It is bounded on the E. and S.E. by the North Sea, and on the other sides by the pars. of Bower, Canisbay, Latheron, and Watten. It extends in length from N. to S. about 14 miles, with an extreme breadth of 7 miles. The coast, which is indented with numerous creeks, is rocky and precipitous, except towards the N., where it forms Keiss and Wick bays, stretching several miles inland, and skirted by a low beach of siliceous sand. The chief promontory is Noss-Head. The surface is nearly flat, comprising several straths varied only by the hills of Bruan, Camster, and Yarrow. It is now well cultivated, except towards the southern and western borders, where are extensive tracts of bog and moss. It is drained by the rivers Wick and Wester-Water, and by numerous small lochs, as Yarrow, Kilminster, Dhu, Hempriggs, Wick, and Windless. The prevailing rocks are clay-slate and graywacke-slate, with some limestone and sandstone, alternating with pyritous shale near the coast. Traces of iron, lead, and copper are met with in several places, the last-named having been formerly worked. The soil is generally stiff clay and peat earth, alternated with loam and siliceous earth. The largest proprietor is Sir G. Dunbar, Bart. The chief seats are Hempriggs House, of the Dunbars; Ulbster, of the Sinclairs; Keiss House, Harland, Stirkoke, Rosebank, Sibster, Tarmach, and Thrumster. The town of Wick, the principal seat of the northern herring fishery and the county town, occupies a convenient site at the head of Wick Bay, on the left bank of the river Wick, over which is a bridge connecting it with Pulteneytown, which nearly rivals it in population, and contains the only good streets and squares. The town consists of Wick-Proper and Louisburgh, the former irregularly built and dirty, but the principal seat of trade. It contains a town and county hall, court-house, Pulteneytown Academy, branches of the City of Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Commercial banks, also a distillery, brewery, and grain and saw-mills. The principal trade is connected with the herring fishery and herring curing establishments; the other manufactures are rope and net-making, boat-building, and an iron-foundry. There are resident here an agent of the British Fishing Society, and vice-consuls of Belgium, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, and the United States; it is also the seat of custom-house establishment. The value of the boats, nets, and lines employed in the herring fishery is about £70,000, and the yield of herrings cured, 165,000 barrels, besides 6,250 not cured. Two weekly newspapers, the John o' Groat Journal and Northern Ensign, are published in the town. Wick was erected into a royal burgh by charter of James VI. in 1589. The town council consists of a provost, 3 bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and 9 common councillors, but their authority is limited to Wick-Proper, the British Fishing Society being superiors of Pulteneytown, by whom it was established in 1808. The court of quarter-sessions for Caithnessshire is held here four times a year; also the sheriff's ordinary and commissary courts are held on every Tuesday and Friday, and the sheriff's small-debt court every Tuesday, but the justice of peace small-debt court every alternate Monday. The parliamentary burgh, which includes, besides the royal burgh, all the suburbs, unites with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Cromarty, Tain, and Dingwall in returning one member to parliament: the constituency in 1857 was 264. The par. is in the presb. of Caithness and synod of Sutherland and Caithness. The minister's stipend is £268 6*s.* 7*d.* The parish church was built in 1830, besides which there is a chapel-of-ease in Pulteneytown, built in 1843, and a quoad sacra parish church at Keiss. There are Free churches at Wick, Pulteneytown, and Bruan, a Free-church preaching-station at Keiss, also Reformed Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches in Pulteneytown, and Independent, Baptist, Evangelical Union, and Roman Catholic chapels within the parish. There are a parochial school, Pulteney Academy, two General Assembly schools, two Free Church schools, two Society's schools, and several private schools. Market day is on Friday. Fairs are held on the Tuesday after Palm-Sunday, 24th June, 29th July, and on the 17th November (old style), or on the Tuesday after.

WICK, a par. in the hund. of Winterstoke, co. Somerset, 8 miles N.W. of Axbridge. It is situated on the shore of the Bristol Channel, at the mouth of the river Yeo. The living is a cur. annexed to the vic. of Congresbury. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was anciently a chapel-of-ease to Congresbury. There is a National school.

WICK, a tythg. in the pars. of Kemble and Oaksey, hund. of Malmesbury, co. Wilts, 6 miles N.E. of Malmesbury, and 7 N.W. of Cricklade.

WICK. See WICK-NEAR-PERSHORE, co. Worcester.

WICK AND ABSON, a par. in the hund. of Puckle-Church, co. Gloucester, 7 miles N.E. of Bristol, and 4 miles N.W. of Bath. The village is situated at the foot of a rugged hill, 200 feet high, composed of alternate layers of limestone and petro-silex. It is a polling-place for the county elections, joined to Abson. There are several collieries, and lead-ore is found. At Toghill in this parish the Parliamentarians under Sir William Waller were defeated by the Marquis of Hertford in 1642, when Sir Beville Granville was slain, to whose memory a monument has been erected on Lansdown Hill, near Bath, by his descendant the late Earl of Bath. The living is a cur. annexed, with that of Westerleigh, to the vic. of Puckle-Church. The church is dedicated to St. James. There is an ancient camp, supposed to be British, and the neighbourhood abounds with antique remains and natural curiosities.

WICKEN, a par. in the hund, of Staploe, co. Cambridge, 7 miles S.E. of Ely, 8 N.W. of Newmarket, and 3 S. of Soham. The village and parish are situated in a fenny district, intersected by the Buckingham canal. The manor belonged to the Gernons, from whom it came to the Peytons in the reign of Edward III., and subsequently to Henry, son of the Protector Cromwell, who died at Spinney Abbey. This mansion, now in ruins, occupied the site of a small priory founded by Sir Hugh de Malebisse in the time of Henry III. for Augustine Canons. An Act was passed in 1840 for enclosing the waste lands. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £90. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, contains a brass of Margaret Peyton, bearing date 1414, and the vault of the Cromwell family, in which the Protector's wife Elizabeth and his son Henry lie interred. The register dates from 1564. There are National schools, partially endowed, also an almshouse for widows. Coins and other antiquities have been found here.

WICKEN, a par. in the hund. of Cleley, co. Northampton, 3 miles S.W. of Stoney-Stratford. The village is situated near the river Ouse and Buckingham canal. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val., with that of Wyke-Hamon consolidated, £416. The church is dedicated to St. John the Evangelist. The church of Wyke-Hamon has long since been demolished. The parochial charities produce £23 per annum. There is a National school, supported by Sir J. Mordaunt, Bart., who is lord of the manor. Andrew Fuller, the Baptist divine, was born here in 1754.

WICKEN-BONANT, a par. in the hund. of Uttlesford, co. Essex, 2 miles S.W. of Newport railway station, and 4 S.W. of Saffron Walden. It is situated near the Stort, a tributary of the Cam or Granta. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, has recently been restored by the present rector at a cost of £2,000. The register dates from 1590.

WICKENBY, a par. in the W. div. of Wraggoe wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 4 miles N.W. of Wragby, and 10 N.E. of Lincoln. It is a station on the Hull and Lincolnshire railway. The par. includes the hmlts. of Rosedale, Ling Spot, and Westalby. The village is a meet for the Burton hounds. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £350. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Lawrence. There is a village school. Mrs. Gillyatt is lady of the manor.

WICK-EPISCOPI, a tnshp. and vil. in the par. of St. John Bedwardine, lower div. of Oswaldslow hund., co. Worcester, 2 miles S.W. of Worcester. It is situated on the river Tame, near the Severn, and comprises Upper and Lower Wick.

WICKER, an ecclesiastical district in the par. and borough of Sheffield, wap. of Strafforth, West Riding co. York, adjoining Sheffield, of which it is a suburb, containing, according to the census of 1861, 10,796 inhabitants.

WICKERSLACK, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Maulds Meaburn, par. of Crosby Ravensworth, 3 miles E. of Shap, and 6 W. of Appleby, on the river Lyvennet.

WICKERSLEY, a par. in the S. div. of Strafforth wap., West Riding co. York, 3 miles S.E. of Rotherham. There are numerous quarries of fine soft gritstone, of which grindstones are made for the supply of the Sheffield manufacturers. Fossils of various kinds are found in the quarries. Mr. Lumley's hounds meet here. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of York, val. £350. The church, dedicated to St. Alban, was rebuilt in 1834. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there is a National school. The charities produce about £7 per annum.

WICKFORD, a par. in the hund. of Barstable, co. Essex, 5 miles S.E. of Billericay. The village is situated at a ford of the river Crouch, now crossed by two bridges. The soil is generally wet and heavy. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £390. The Independents have a chapel.

WICKHAM, a par. in the hund. of Titchfield, co. Hants, 3 miles N. of Fareham, and 4 S.E. of Bishop's Waltham. The village is situated on the road from London to Gosport, near the river Meon. The par. includes part of the hmlt. of Crockerhill, and the extra-parochial lib. of Wickham Forest, or Mellishes Bottom. Courts leet and baron are held annually by William Garnier, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £600. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there is a mixed National school. William of Wykeham was born here in 1324, and Dr. Joseph Warton, the poet, died rector in 1800. A fair is held on the 20th of May.

WICKHAM, a tythg. and chplry. in the par. of Welford, hund. of Kintbury-Eagle, co. Berks, 5 miles N.W. of Newbury. The chapel-of-ease is dedicated to St. Swithin.

WICKHAM, a chplry. in the par. of Spalding, wap. of Elloe, co. Lincoln, 3 miles N. of Spalding.

WICKHAM, a hmlt. in the par. and hund. of Banbury, co. Oxford, 1½ mile S.W. of Banbury.

WICKHAM, BISHOP'S. See BISHOP'S WICKHAM, co. Essex.

WICKHAMBREUX, a par. in the hund. of Downhamford, lathe of St. Augustine, co. Kent, 5 miles N.E. of Canterbury, on the river Stour. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £790. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains memorials of the Beake and Larkin families. There is a parochial school partially endowed by Rev. J. Smith in 1756. The charities produce about £8 per annum.

WICKHAMBROOK, a par. in the hund. of Risbridge, co. Suffolk, 6 miles N.W. of Clare, and 9 S.W. of Bury St. Edmund's. The parish is situated on a branch of the river Stour, and is a polling place for the western division of the county. Petty sessions are held monthly at the "White Horse Inn." The principal residence is Bansfield Hall, occupied by J. W. Bromley, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £350, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains several monuments and tablets, and a brass of T. Burrough, dated 1597. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there are parochial and Sunday schools.

WICKHAM, CHILD'S. See CHILD'S WICKHAM, co. Gloucester.

WICKHAM, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Lessness, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. Kent, 2 miles S.E. of Woolwich, and 10 from London. The par., which includes part of the hmlt. of Welling, is situated on the high road from London to Dartford and Dover. A large portion of the land and tithes belong to the Chatham Chest, to which they were given by Admiral Sir John Hawkins in the reign of Elizabeth. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of London, val. £180. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, contains two brasses, one of John de Blendon, dated 1325, and the other of W. Payn and his wives, 1568, and some old wall paintings. The charities produce about £150 per annum, including £90, the endowment of Forster's school.

WICKHAMFORD, a par. in the upper div. of Blackenhurst hund., co. Worcester, 2 miles S.E. of Evesham, its post town and railway station. The land is chiefly in pasture, and belongs to Lord Sandys. Limestone is obtained in abundance. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £41, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, contains two altar tombs to the family of Lord Sandys, by whom the church has recently been restored.

WICKHAM MARKET, a par. and post town in the hund. of Wilford, co. Suffolk, 5 miles N.E. of Woodbridge, and 12 from Ipswich. It is a junction station on the East Suffolk branch of the Great Eastern railway. The village is situated on the bank of the river Deben, and, as its name implies, was formerly a market town by grant of Henry VI., but the market and fairs are now disused. The Plomesgate union workhouse was built here in 1837, but the shire-hall, in which quarter-sessions were formerly held, was taken down some years since by the lord of the manor, and the sessions were removed to Woodbridge. The manor anciently belonged to the Ufford family, who gave it to Campsey Priory, and at the Dissolution was granted by Henry VIII. to Anthony Wingfield, but now belongs to the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon, who is lord of the manor of Wickham with its members and Byng. The impropriation, commuted at £195, belongs to Pemberton's charity at Ipswich. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £200, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has an octagonal tower surmounted by a spire, which, being built on a hill, forms a landmark. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels, and there are National, British, and infant schools. The charities produce about £160 per annum, including the endowment of Wood's almshouses and the rent of the town estate of 40 acres, which is now applied, under a decree of the Court of Chancery, in apprenticing poor children, the support of the National schools, and the remainder to the poor.

WICKHAMPTON, a par. in the hund. of South Walsham, co. Norfolk, 6 miles N.E. of Loddon, 8 W. of Yarmouth, and 2 N. of Reedham railway station. The parish is intersected by the Norwich and Yarmouth section of the Great Eastern railway. The living is a rect,* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £150. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains an altar tomb, with effigies of Sir W. de Gerbrygge and lady. The register commences in 1561. There is a chapel for Wesleyans.

WICKHAM ST. PAUL, a par. in the hund. of Hinckford, co. Essex, 3 miles N. of Castle Hedingham railway station, 4 S.W. of Sudbury, and 12 N. of Braintree. This place, which has belonged to the cathedral of St. Paul's since the 10th century, is situated near the source of a brook falling into the river Stour. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £410, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has recently been refitted, and stained windows inserted in the chancel. There are schools recently built, and in part supported by the rent of 4 acres, called the Town-field charity, besides poors' cottages.

WICKHAM SKEITH, a par. in the hund. of Hartismere, co. Suffolk, 3 miles N.E. of Finningham railway station, and 5 S.W. of Eye. The Hall, rebuilt in 1846, is now the residence of the Rev. C. Garrard, who is lord of the manor. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The parochial register dates from 1682. There is a village school. The charities, consisting chiefly of the town estate, produce £20 per annum. Many coins of Harold and Edward the Confessor were some years ago found on Wizard Farm, and are deposited in the British Museum.

WICKHAM, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Ruxley, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. Kent, 3 miles S. of Bromley, 4 S.E. of Croydon, and 2½ S. of the Beckenham railway station. The village is situated near the borders of Surrey, and within the south-eastern postal district of the metropolis. It was a market town under the Huntingfields in the reign of Edward II., and afterwards came to the Heydon and Lennard families. The soil is principally chalk, alternated with gravel and clay. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £514. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is situated a mile to the E. of the village, and has some stained windows, and tombs of the Lennards. The register dates from 1548. There are National schools and a parochial lending library. Hayes Place was the seat of the Earl of Chatham, whose son, William Pitt, was born here in 1759. Colonel J. F. Cator Lennard, who resides at Wickham Court, is lord of the manor. A fair is held on Easter Monday.

WICKHAM, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Chilford, co. Cambridge, 4 miles N.E. of Linton, and 10 from Newmarket. The village is principally the property of the Earl of Hardwicke, who is lord of the manor. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £80. The church is dedicated to St. Mary.

WICKLEWOOD, a par. in the hund. of Forehoe, co. Norfolk, 3 miles N.W. of Wymondham, and the same distance from Hingham. The village is situated near the river Yare, and contains the union workhouse for the hundred of Forehoe, built in 1777. A market and two fairs, granted by Henry VI., were formerly held here. In this parish is a small lake of about 20 acres. The living is a vic.,* comprising the discharged vics. of All Saints and St. Andrew, in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £180. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains several tablets and a piscina. The register commences in 1585. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The National schools were built in 1840. The charities, including the fuel allotment, produce about £12 per annum.

WICKLOW, a maritime co. in the prov. of Leinster, Ireland, is bounded N. by the co. of Dublin, E. by the Irish Sea, S. by the co. of Wexford, and W. by the cos. of Carlow, Kildare, and a detached portion of Dublin. It lies between 52° 40′ and 53° 14′ N. lat., 6° 0′ and 6° 47′ W. long.; its greatest length from N. to S. is 38 miles, and its breadth from E. to W. 33 miles. The area comprises 781 square miles, or 500,178 acres, of which 280,393 are arable, 200,754 are uncultivated, 17,600 under plantations, 341 under towns and villages, and 1,090 under water. The population in 1841 was 126,143; in 1851 it was 98,978; and in 1861 it was 86,479. The number of houses in 1861 was 15,129, of which 14,418 were inhabited, 667 were uninhabited, and 44 were in course of construction. The Poor-Law valuation in 1851 was £248,410, and the general valuation in 1861 was £258,095. The number of persons from this county who emigrated from Irish ports with the expressed intention of not returning, between May, 1851, and December, 1865, was 13,095, or 13 per cent. of the population at the former date, a comparatively small number, as the proportion of emigration from the entire of Ireland during that term was 20 per cent. This county was the seat of the Cauci, of Ptolemy, who also held the eastern parts of Kildare, and are supposed to have been of Belgic Gaulish extraction. On the arrival of the English, the low lands, being easily accessible, were speedily reduced and assigned to Maurice Fitzgerald, but the natives, having withdrawn to the mountains, long preserved their independence, and committed ravages on the lands of the invaders. Feagh M'Hugh, chief of the O'Byrnes, one of the original septs, was in rebellion in the reign of Elizabeth, but was defeated in 1596, and slain in the following year. His son gave in his submission to James I. in 1605, on condition that the county, which had previously been included with Dublin, should be separated from it under its present name. In 1641 the natives took share in the disturbances, and held their ground against Sir Charles Coote, but were subdued by Cromwell on his progress to Wexford. Again in 1798 many joined the Wexford insurgents in their march on Dublin, and, being repulsed near Arklow by the military, retired to the mountains, from which the soldiers could not dislodge them. They subsequently came to terms with the authorities, military roads were made through the district, barracks were built in several places, and order was re-established. The surface is much diversified, and the scenery wild and picturesque. It comprises a large portion of the south-eastern mountain chain of Ireland, the general direction of which is from N.E. to S.W., and while the northern and western declivities are rough and abrupt, those on the S. and E. slope gently downwards, terminating in many places in valleys and glens. The mountain districts may be divided into eight groups, separated by precipitous ravines, generally narrow and straight; the principal summits being Kippure on the N., 2,473 feet; Douce, 2,384 feet, Tonelagee, 2,683 feet, and Lugnaquilla, 3,039 feet, being the highest in the county, in the centre; Slieve Gadoe, 2,200 feet, and Keadeen, 2,158 feet, in the W.; and Croghan Kinsella, 2,064 feet, in the S. Within this mountain range are several lakes at great elevations, and many of them situated in mountainous recesses of great depth. The most important are Lower Lough Bray, 1,225 feet above the level of the sea; Upper Lough Bray, 1,453 feet; Lough Ouler, 1,829 feet; Nahanagan, 1,384 feet; Lough Tay, 807 feet; and Lough Dan, 685 feet. The district to the W. of these lakes, and immediately about them, is generally uninhabited, but is now rendered easily accessible by the military road which traverses it. Eastward lies the Sugarloaf, a conical hill rising to 2,004 feet; the lesser Sugarloaf, and Bray Head, overhanging the sea. The Scalp, at the entrance to the county from Dublin, is a deep defile formed by a disruption of the granite rock, large disjointed stones covering the sides, and threatening to tumble down. The Dargle is a cleft in a wooded hollow, through which flows a river of the same name. The Glenisloreane, a feeder of the Dargle, forms a waterfall in the demesne of Powerscourt, tumbling over a perpendicular rock from an elevation of 300 feet. The Glen of the Downs, on the road to Wicklow, is wooded on both sides to a height of 500 to 600 feet. The Devil's Glen, near Ashford, resembles the Dargle, but is wilder. The N. side is wooded, large rocks occasionally appearing. At the head of the glen the Vartry river forms a waterfall over a ledge of rocks 100 feet high. This river has been selected to supply the city of Dublin with water. Still farther S. is the Vale of Ovoca. The valley extends from Rathdrum to Arklow, about 10 miles. Its eastern side is richly wooded, but the other has been much cut up. The Ovoca is formed by the confluence of the Avonbeg and the Avonmore, at a point 3 miles below Rathdrum, which is known as the first "meeting of the waters," rendered memorable by the lovely melody by Thomas Moore which bears this name, and was suggested to the poet by this spot. About 2 miles lower down there is a second meeting, where the Aughrim, a mountain stream, joins the Ovoca. The Avonbeg, or Little Avon, which in the upper part of its course is called the Ess, rises in the W. of the county, and forms a waterfall at the head of Glenmalure, which lies on the N.E. of Lugnaquilla, and is 8 to 10 miles long. The mountains rise 600 to 800 feet above the valley, which has a desolate appearance. There are lead mines at Glenmalure. The Avonmore, or Great Avon, has its source near Tonelagee mountain, flows through Glenmacaness and the vale of Clara to its junction with the Avonbeg. At Laragh it receives the waters of the Gleneralo, which comes from Glendalough. This valley extends E. and W., and is enclosed on both sides by inaccessible mountains, rising 500 to 600 feet almost precipitously, and uniting at the W., where the small stream falls over the rocks to the vale below, forming two small lakes. Near the lower end of the lesser lake are the ruins of the "Seven churches," with St. Kevin's Kitchen, a round tower, and some other antiquities. The only rivers of importance not already noticed, are the Slaney, which rises to the N. of Lugnaquilla, and flows south-westerly to the N. of the co. of Carlow; and the Liffey, which has its source in a bog in the N., and flows into Kildare, receiving in this county the waters of King river. The coast is mostly rugged or dangerous from sand-banks, presenting no bay or other shelter for shipping. Near its northern extremity is Bray Head, rising with an elevation of 870 feet; further on is Wicklow Head, 268 feet, and Arklow Rock, about a mile N. of the boundary of Wexford county, 411 feet high. The only railway in the county is the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford line, which keeps for the most part along the coast, but turning inland below the town of Wicklow, runs through the vale of Ovoca to Arklow. The principal roads are the mail road from Dublin to Wexford, which passes Bray, Newtown Mount-Kennedy, Rathdrum, and Arklow, and has branches to Wicklow and Carlow; a road from Dublin to Carlow, passing Blessington and Baltinglass in the N.W. of the county; and the military road already mentioned, passing by Glendalough and Laragh. Many new roads have been made, and the condition of others has much improved. The geological strata belong chiefly to the primary and transition formations. The sea-cliffs, and most of the interior of the county, consist of clay-slate, greywacke, and greywacke slate, but the great central mountain range is composed wholly of granite, which is generally very pure, but in some parts is intermixed with various minerals, as rock crystal, heavy spar, magnetic iron ore, copper and iron pyrites, and small veins of quartz. This granitic district has a varying breadth of from 7 to 14 miles, and is flanked by bands of metamorphic rock. The strata near Bray are much inflected, but in other parts they are generally regular, dipping to the S.E. Wicklow is the only Irish county which has no limestone, but felspar porphyry, quartz rock, and greenstone, occur in many places, and at Arklow the rock exhibits a variety of trap similar to that of the Giant's Causeway. The principal minerals are pyrites and copper and lead ores, but silver, iron, zinc, tin, manganese, tungsten, arsenic, and antimony, are found, and gold in small quantities in the streams. Smelting, principally of lead, is carried on to a small extent in blast furnaces heated with turf, lime, and blind coal. The climate is mild and moist, but healthy. The principal agricultural products are oats, potatoes, and some wheat. Dairies are numerous, and large quantities of butter are made for the Dublin market. Flannels were formerly extensively manufactured, but are now little attended to. There is one silk-spinning mill with 1,182 spindles, which employs upwards of 100 persons. The Wicklow fishery embraces parts of the Dublin and Arklow districts, but is not much attended to, chiefly from the want of safe harbours. Oysters are taken from Arklow bank. The county belongs chiefly to the diocese of Dublin and Glendalagh, with small portions in the dioceses of Ferns and Leighlin, which are united with the see of Ossory. The diocese of Glendalagh, of which Saint Kevin was the first bishop, early in the 6th century, existed separately till 1491, when it was joined to that of Dublin. In the Roman Catholic distribution it forms part of the archdiocese of Dublin, and of the diocese of Ferns, which is suffragan to Dublin. Of the population in 1861, 15,285, or 17·7 per cent., were members of the Established Church; 70,044, or 81·0 per cent. were Roman Catholics; and 1,150, or 1·3 per cent., belonged to other denominations. The county is divided for civil purposes into 8 baronies, Arklow, Ballinacor, North and South, Newcastle, Rathdrum, Shillelagh, and Talbotstown, Lower and Upper, and contains 59 parishes. It returns two members to parliament for the county at large. Its government is entrusted to a lord-lieutenant and custos, vice-lieutenant, high sheriff, 17 deputy-lieutenants, 1 resident and about 92 local magistrates. It is in the Leinster circuit, the assizes being held at Wicklow. Quarter sessions are held there, and also at Arklow, Bray, Baltinglass, and Tinahely; and petty sessions at 13 places. The county is partly within the military district of the Curragh. Fairs are held at 35 places, and there are 12 market towns. The county gaol is at Wicklow, and there are infirmaries at Wicklow and Baltinglass. There are three Poor-Law unions, Baltinglass, Shillelagh, and Rathdrum; and 15 dispensary districts. The seats are more numerous than in any other county in Ireland. The principal are Shelton Abbey, of the Earl of Wicklow; Kilruddery, of the Earl of Meath; Stratford Lodge, of the Earl of Aldborough; Glenart Castle, of the Earl of Carysfort; Coolattin, of Earl Fitzwilliam; Charleville, of Viscount Monck; Powerscourt, of Viscount Powerscourt; Russborough, of Earl of Milltown; Hollybrook, of Hodson, Bart.; Lough Bray, of Crampton, Bart.; Castle Howard, of Brooke, Esq. There are cromlechs at Cabinteely, Lugnaquilla, and Baltinglass; a cairn at Knockroe, a druidical circle at Donoughmore, and raths near Knockloe and Baltinglass. Of the ecclesiastical remains, the most interesting are St. Bridget's chain and well, near Kilranclagh, the ruins of Seven Churches, the round tower and old cross at Glendalough, the abbey at Baltinglass, the friaries of Wicklow and Aghold, the old church of Donard, near Stratford, also old castles, which may be met with in many parts of the country.

WICKLOW, a seaport, market town, and municipal borough and county town of co. Wicklow, prov. of Leinster, Ireland, 16 miles N. of Arklow, and 31 S.E. of Dublin. It is situated on the estuary of the river Vartry, in the pars. of Kilpoole, Rathnew, and Drumkay, and is a station on the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford railway. The estuary of the Vartry, called Brom Lough, into which the river falls about 2 miles above the town, is so narrow at its mouth as to be crossed by a bridge of eight arches. It is separated from the sea by a narrow strip of land called the Murragh, upon which races are occasionally held. There is a bar across the entrance to the harbour, on which there is only 8 or 9 feet of water at high tide, rendering it fit only for small craft. In ancient times it was frequented as a maritime station by the Danes, who gave it the name of Wykinglogh and Wigginge Lough, and held it till 1170, when it was seized by Maurice Fitzgerald, who built a castle here, and died before it was completed. Maurice's sons were dispossessed by William Fitz-Aldelm, and obliged to accept Ferns in exchange. The town was burned by the Irish in 1301; but William Fitzwilliam, a descendant of an early English settler, put the castle in a state of defence in 1375, and his family preserved the constableship for many generations. It was taken by the O'Byrnes, from the N. of the county, early in the 16th century, but was surrendered to Henry VIII. in 1543. Luke O'Toole besieged the castle in 1641, but was obliged to retire by Sir Charles Coote, who put many of the inhabitants to the sword. Its population in 1851 was 3,147, and in 1861 3,448, inhabiting 582 houses. The town is built on elevated rugged ground on the N. side of Wicklow Head. The streets are narrow and irregular, but have lately been much improved. Of the population in 1861, 649 were members of the Established Church, 2,673 were Roman Catholics, 26 Presbyterians, 68 Methodists, 1 Independent, and 31 of the Society of Friends. The parish church of Drumkay is situated near the round mound. The S. door has a Norman arch, the remains of the old building. There are a Roman Catholic chapel, and meeting-houses for Methodists and Friends. The other public buildings are the court-house, gaol, infirmary, market-house, and barrack. The assizes for the county are held here, also quarter and petty sessions. The import trade is confined to timber, iron, coals, and limestone, and the exports to agricultural produce and ore raised in the various mines of the county. The fishery is good, but the shallowness of the harbour prevents the employment of proper vessels. There are two light-houses on Wicklow head, 1½ mile E. of the town. The ruins of Black Castle, built in 1375 by William Fitzgerald, occupy a rock overhanging the sea, and in the town are the ruins of a Franciscan abbey, besides other remains. The Howards of Shelton Abbey take the title of earl from this place. Races take place in May. Market-day is on Saturday. Fairs are held on the 28th March, 24th May, 12th August, and 25th November.

WICKMERE, a par. in the hund. of South Erpingham, co. Norfolk, 5 miles N.W. of Aylsham. The village is principally the property of the Earl of Orford, who is lord of the manor. The living is a rect. consolidated with that of Wolterton. There is a school for girls, supported by the Countess of Orford.

WICK-NEAR-PERSHORE, a chplry. in the par. of St. Andrew Pershore, co. Worcester, 1 mile S.E. of Pershore, of which it is a suburb. An Austin priory was founded here in the reign of Stephen by Peter de Corbezon, who a few years afterwards removed it to Studley, in Warwickshire. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £110. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

WICKS, or WYKES UFFORD, a hmlt. in the par. of Rushmere, co. Suffolk, 2 miles N.E. of Ipswich.

WICKS OF BAIGLIE, a commanding spot near Perth, co. Perth, Scotland.

WICKTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Stoke-Prior, hund. of Wolphy, co. Hereford, 4 miles S.E. of Leominster. It is joined to Risbury.

WICKVER. See WYGFAIR, co. Denbigh.

WICKWAR, a par., market town, and borough by prescription, in the upper div. of Grumbald's Ash hund., co. Gloucester, 4 miles N. of Chipping Sodbury, 16 N.E. of Bristol, and 20 S.W. of Gloucester. It is a station on the Midland Counties railway. This town is situated on the Cotswolds, and on the main road from Bristol to the N. The clothing trade was formerly carried on, but has for some time been discontinued. There are malt-houses and a brewery, and a mechanics' institute, with library and reading-rooms. The population in 1861 was 949. In the reign of Edward I. it received a grant of a weekly market and two annual fairs, and in that of Charles I. a charter of incorporation, under which it is governed by a mayor and an indefinite number of aldermen. A manorial court under Earl Ducie is held triennially in October, and a flower and fruit show annually at Tortworth Court, for growers among the earl's tenant farmers and allotment tenants. Coal has been discovered in the parish, which is watered by two small streams. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £440. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas, or to the Holy Trinity, was repaired in 1829. There are chapels for Independents and Wesleyans, and National schools. The local charities produce about £125 per annum, besides which every labourer of this parish is allowed half an acre of land at a low rent, either under Earl Ducie or the rector. Market-day is on Monday. Fairs are held on 6th April, 2nd July, and the first Monday in November.

WICK-WICK, a hmlt. in the par. of Frampton-Cotterell, co. Gloucester, 4 miles W. of Chipping-Sodbury.

WIDCOMBE, NORTH, a tythg. in the par. of Chewton-Mendip, hund. of Chewton, co. Somerset, 5 miles S.W. of Pensford, and 8 N.E. of Wells.

WIDCOMBE, SOUTH, a hmlt. in the par. of Hinton Blewett, co. Somerset, near Widcombe, North.

WIDCOMBE-WITH-LYNCOMBE, a par. in the hund. of Bath-Forum, co. Somerset, 1 mile S.E. of Bath. At Holloway, in this parish, is St. Mary Magdalene's lunatic hospital, founded in the 14th century by John Cantlow, prior of Bath, and rebuilt in 1761.

WIDDALE, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Hawes, par. of Aysgarth, North Riding co. York, 3 miles S.W. of Hawes. It is situated in the valley of the river Ure, under Widdale Fell.

WIDDEN DOWN, a hmlt. in the par. of South Tawton, co. Devon, 5 miles S.E. of Oakhampton.

WIDDINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Uttlesford, co. Essex, 8 miles N.E. of Bishop's Stortford, 4 S. of Saffron Walden, and 1 mile S.W. of Newport railway station, on the Cambridge section of the Great Eastern line. The village dates from the time of Edward the Confessor. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £540. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The register commences towards the close of the 17th century. The chapel formerly attached to Widdington Hall has been converted into a parlour. There are a chapel for Independents and a National school.

WIDDINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Little Ouseburn, West Riding co. York, 8 miles S.E. of Aldbrough, on the river Ure.

WIDDRINGTON, a par. chplry. in the E. div. of Morpeth ward, co. Northumberland, 8 N.E. of Morpeth, its post town. It is a station on the Newcastle and Berwick railway. This chplry., which was separated from the par. of Woodhorn and invested with distinct parochial rights in 1768, comprises the vil. of Waddington and the hmlts. of Druridge and Linton, the former situated on the coast of Druridge Bay, and the latter on the river Line. The surface is generally level, and the soil a strong clay upon a substratum of sandstone. In the chapelry are brick and tile works and a Landsale colliery. The ancient castle of Widdrington, which gave title of baron to the Widdringtons distinguished in the border wars, and who forfeited it in 1715, was burnt down about 1780, but has been rebuilt, and is now the seat of Lord Vernon, who is lord of the manor. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £70. There are a United Session chapel of the Presbyterians and a circulating library and reading-room.

WIDECOMBE-IN-THE-MOOR, a par. in the hund. of Haytor, locally in that of Lifton, co. Devon, 5 miles N.W. of Ashburton, and 10 E. of Chudleigh. The parish is on the borders of Dartmoor, and is watered by three streams flowing into the Dart, which bounds the parish on the W. and S. The soil is light and sandy, and the subsoil granite. Near the village is the Logan rock, and in the neighbourhood are the hmlts. of Dunstone, Jordan, Lower Town, Ponsworthy, Pondsgate, and Venton. Tin has been found, and there are remains of ancient stream-works. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £280, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, dedicated to St. Pancras, was struck by lightning during divine service on the 21st October, 1638, when four persons were killed. There are chapels for Calvinists in Watergate, and for Wesleyans at Dunstone and Lensdon, and two schools partly supported by endowment. A fair is held on the third Thursday in October, at which many Dartmoor sheep and ponies are sold. The Rev. T. Fry is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WIDFORD, a par. in the hund. of Chelmsford, co. Essex, 1½ mile S.W. of Chelmsford, its post town and railway station. The parish is supposed to have derived its name from a ford over the river Cam, a feeder of the Chelmer. The land is well cultivated. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £257. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1862. The parochial charities produce about £15 per annum. The principal residence is Hylands, the seat of Arthur Pryor, Esq., who is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WIDFORD, a par. in the lower div. of Slaughter hund., co. Oxford, formerly in Gloucester, 1½ mile S.E. of Burford. The parish is situated on the river Windrush. There is no village, only a few farmhouses. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £100. The church is dedicated to St. Oswald. The charities produce about £7 per annum.

WIDFORD, a par. in the hund. of Braughin, co. Herts, 4 miles N.E. of Ware, and 3 N. of Roydon railway station; it has also a station on the Buntingford branch of the Great Eastern railway. The village is situated on the river Ash. There are two ancient barrows in the parish, and two small hamlets called Blakesware and Southend. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £250. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is a National school. The charities produce about £30 per annum.

WIDIAL. See WYDDIALL, co. Herts.

WIDLEY, a par. in the hund. of Portsdown, co. Hants, 5 miles N.E. of Fareham, and 4 of Portsmouth. It includes the principal part of the vil. of Cosham. The soil is fertile, resting upon a substratum of limestone, which is quarried. A considerable portion of the parish is woodland. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. with the vic. of Wymering annexed, £678. The church is dedicated to St. Mary, and has been enlarged. There are two schools, and a chapel for Independents at Cosham.

WIDMER-POOL, a par. in the S. div. of Rushcliffe wap., co. Notts, 9 miles S.E. of Nottingham, and 8¼ N.E. of Loughborough. The village, almost entirely rebuilt, is situated on Fairham brook and the main road from Melton to Nottingham. The soil is a heavy clay upon a substratum of limestone. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £225. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was rebuilt in 1831, with the exception of the tower and spire, which were struck by lightning in 1832, but restored in 1836. There are a chapel for Baptists and a National school. F. Robinson, Esq., is lord of the manor. The ancient Roman Fosseway passed on the western side of the parish.

WIDNES, a tnshp. and town in the par. of Prescot, hund. of West Derby, co. Lancaster, 5 miles S.E. of Prescot, 6 from Warrington, and 13 N.W. of Liverpool. It has stations on the Manchester and Liverpool and St. Helen's section of the London and North-Western, and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railways. It is situated opposite Runcorn on the navigable river Mersey, here joined by the Sankey canal, and on the Liverpool and St. Helen's, and Warrington and Garston railways. The tnshp. includes the town of Widnes, with a population, in 1861, of 4,803, the ecclesiastical district of St. Mary's, with 3,872, the vils. of Appleton, Fearnworth, Widnes Docks, and Wood-End, and the hmlts. of Hanging Birch, Lane End, Lunt's Heath, and Upton. There are extensive chemical, soap, alkali, and copper smelting works, oil mills, boat-building yards, factories for watch and clock movements, and brickfields. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Chester. The church of St. Mary was erected in 1856. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National, British, and Wesleyan schools. The Marquis of Cholmondeley is lord of the manor.

WIDWORTHY, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of Colyton, co. Devon, 3 miles S.E. of Honiton, and 6 from Axminster, on the road from Honiton to Axminster. The land is chiefly in pasture, and there are some dairy farms. The soil is clay and marl upon a subsoil of gravel. Freestone is quarried for building, and there are earthenware works. The principal residence is Widworthy Court, the mansion of Sir E. M. Elton, Bart., who is chief landowner. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £200. The church, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, contains the effigy of a knight in armour and a monument by Bacon to J. Marwood. The register dates from 1540. There is a school partially endowed.

WIELD, a par. in the hund. of Bishop's Sutton, co. Hants, 6 miles W. of Alton. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £70. The church, dedicated to St. James, contains a monument to Sir Richard Wallop, an ancestor of the Earl of Portsmouth. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel.

WIER, an islet in Wier Sound, one of the Orkney group, coast of Scotland, 1 mile S.E. of Rousay.

WIGAN, a par., post, and market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, exercising separate jurisdiction, but locally in the hunds. of West Derby and Salford, co. Lancaster, 17 miles N.W. of Manchester, 30 S. of Lancaster, and 195¼ N.W. of London by railway, or 199 by road. It has stations on the London and North-Western and the Lancashire and Yorkshire railways. The par. contains, besides the borough and tnshp. of its own name, the tnshps. of Abram, Aspull, Billinge Chapel End, Billinge Higher End, Dalton, Haigh, Hindley, Ince, Orrell, Pemberton, Up Holland, and Winstanley. It is situated on the banks of the Douglas, which rises under Rivington Pike, and was made navigable in 1719 to its junction with the Ribble, but which is now superseded by the Leeds and Liverpool canal. From the junction of three Roman roads at this point it has been supposed to occupy the site of a Roman station; but seems rather to owe its origin to a castle built during the Saxon period, and said to have been the scene of some sanguinary struggles between the Saxons and Britons. It is a borough by prescription, having been first chartered by Henry III., and sent two members to parliament twice in the reign of Edward I., but not again till that of Edward VI. In Leland's time it was "as big as Warrington, but better builded." In the Civil War it took the side of the Royalists, and was often the head-quarters of the Earl of Derby, who, in 1651, was defeated here by Colonel Lilburne. In 1745 it was visited by Prince Charles Edward the Pretender, who was sheltered in the Bishopgate house for several days, while he was endeavouring to effect his escape from the kingdom. Under the Municipal Reform Act it was divided into five wards—viz., Scholes, St. George's, Queen-street, Swinley, and All Saints' wards—and is governed by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 town councillors, assisted by a recorder, coroner, town clerk, and other officers, with the style of "mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Wigan." The borough, the bounds being those of the township, returns two members to parliament. The mayor is returning officer. The population of the borough in 1851 was 31,948, and in 1861, 37,658, inhabiting 6,696 houses. The town, which stands on several acclivities, consists of the old town on the right, and of the more modern suburb of Scholes on the left bank of the Douglas, here spanned by several bridges. Both are irregularly built, the streets of the older portion being narrow and crooked, but in the modern part there are several new streets of good houses; the main street is nearly a mile and a half in length, running N. and S., from which the other streets diverge towards the E. and W. It is lighted with gas, paved, and well supplied with water. The public buildings are the townhall, in the market-place, rebuilt in 1720; the Public Hall, in King-street; Moot Hall, Corn Exchange, and Commercial Buildings, mechanics' institute and reading-rooms, library and museum, dispensary, borough gaol, a pillar to Sir J. Tyldesley, the Royalist, put up by Sheriff Rigby in 1679; theatre, union poorhouse, savings-bank, two commercial banks, corn-mills, gas-works, besides about 20 factories and spinning mills, comprising some of the largest in the kingdom. An extensive coal-field surrounds the town, yielding cannel and other coal; and the easy means of transit by water and railway give peculiar facilities for manufactures, which are carried on to a large extent. The staple productions are calicoes, fustians, and other cotton fabrics; linens, checks, cotton twist, ginghams, and table-cloths; there are besides several brass and iron foundries, iron forges, corn-mills, blacksmiths' workshops, rope-walks, and dye works. Wigan is the head of a Poor-law Union, new County Court district and superintendent registry. It is likewise a sessions town and polling place for the county elections. In the immediate vicinity of the town are The Larches, Bellingham Lodge, and Westwood House, to which last is attached a Roman Catholic chapel, dedicated to the Sacré Cœur. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £1,600. The parish church, dedicated to All Saints, was restored in 1850, and contains monuments to the Bradshaighs of Haigh from the reign of Edward III., and a monument to Bishop Hale, who was once rector. The other churches are St. George's, erected in 1781; St. Thomas's, St. Catherine's, and St. James's. There are besides eight churches in the parish, most of which are in the patron. of the rector, the Hon. and Rev. G. T. O. Bridgeman, M.A., who is also rural dean. The Independents, Wesleyans, Primitive and Free Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, and Christian Brethren have chapels. There are a free grammar school, founded in the reign of James I., which has an income from endowment of £250; a blue-coat school, established in 1773, but now united with the National schools; also National, British, Roman Catholic, Wesleyan, ragged, and Sunday schools. The local charities produce about £1,200 per annum, including the school endowments. Market days are Monday and Friday. Fairs are held on the day before Holy Thursday, 27th June, and 28th October.

WIGBOROUGH, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Winstree, co. Essex, 7 miles S.W. of Colchester, its post town. The parish is bounded on the S. by a creek of the river Blackwater, called the Verley, and at high water about 100 acres are inundated. The village, situated on the road from Maldon to Colchester, was formerly of much greater importance than at present. At the hamlet of Salton-Wigborough were anciently extensive salt works. The manor at the time of Domesday survey belonged to the Abbess of Barking, and subsequently passed to the priory of St. Osyth. Near the church is a tumulus, supposed to mark the spot where those slain in a battle with the northern pirates were buried. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £600. The church is dedicated to St. Stephen. There is a chapel for Independents at Tiptree Heath. A number of ancient coins, in an earthen jar, were found in the marshes at the end of the last century.

WIGBOROUGH, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Winstree, co. Essex, 1 mile S.E. of Great Wigborough. The land is marshy pasture, chiefly belonging to the governors of the Charter House, London, who are lords of the manor. The parish is bounded on the N. by the Mersea Channel, and on the S. by Verley Channel. The village is on Verley Creek, at the mouth of the river Blackwater. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £252, in the patron. of the Charter House. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

WIGDON, a tythg. in the par. of Yeovil, co. Somerset.

WIGGENHALL ST. GERMAN'S, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge-Marsland, co. Norfolk, 7 miles N.W. of Downham Market, and 4 S.W. of Lynn. The village is divided by the river Great Ouse into two portions, connected with each other by a bridge. The surface is flat, and a considerable portion of the land lies below high-water mark. The four Wiggenhalls are all in the manor of Fitton, and are for the most part below the level of the river Ouse, which is confined by high banks, and in this part of its course conducted through an artificial channel called the "Eau Brink" cut, which was straightened in 1835. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £134, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church stands on the E. bank of the Ouse. The Wesleyans, New Connexion, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities produce about £1 10*s.* per annum.

WIGGENHALL ST. MARY MAGDALENE, a par. as above, 2 miles S. of Wiggenhall St. German's, and 6 S.W. of Lynn. It is a station on the Lynn and Dereham branch of the Great Eastern railway. The village is situated on the western bank of the river Great Ouse, over which is a bridge. Above half the parish is fenny land, and is drained by a steam-engine of 40 horse-power. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £270. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, contains a carved screen, three sedilia, and some stained arms. The Baptists and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there is a National school. There are remains of Crabbe Abbey, founded in 1181 as a cell to Castle Acre.

WIGGENHALL ST. MARY THE VIRGIN, as above, 1 mile N.W. of Wiggenhall St. German's, and 5 miles S.W. of Lynn. The village is on the western bank of the Eau Brink, or Ouse, and on the opposite side is the hmlt. of Saddlebow, within this parish. The ancient hall, built by the Kerville family, has long ago been demolished, with the exception of the gateway. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £160. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains remains of a carved screen, brass lectern, and an altar tomb of the Kervilles and Plowdens, with the effigies of a knight, his lady, and two children. In the churchyard is the tomb of Hatton Berners, the regicide. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel, and there is a parochial school. W. H. Candler Browne, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WIGGENHALL ST. PETER, a par. as above, half a mile S.E. of Wiggenhall St. German's, and 4½ miles S.W. of Lynn. The parish is intersected by the river Ouse, the chief part of the village being situated on the eastern bank. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £100. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a font carved with two cross keys.

WIGGESLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Thorney, co. Notts, 8 miles S.E. of Tuxford.

WIGGINTHORPE, a tnshp. in the par. of Terrington, co. York, 8 miles W. of New Malton.

WIGGINTON, a par. in the hund. of Bloxham, co. Oxford, 6 miles S.W. of Banbury, and 5 N.W. of Deddington. The village is situated on the river Sucre, or Sweir, and appears to have been a Roman settlement from the remains of tesselated pavements and coins of Constantine which have been found. In 1824 the site of a Roman villa was partially uncovered, one room of which was semi-octagonal, measuring 20 feet by 14, and another 20 feet by 17½, both paved with tesseræ of various colours and heated by flues under the floor. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £290, in the patron. of Jesus College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. There is a Dissenting chapel and a parochial school.

WIGGINTON, a par. in the hund. of Dacorum, co. Herts, 1 mile S.E. of Tring railway station, and 3 miles N.W. of Berkhampstead, near the Grand Junction canal. The manor belongs to the Harcourt family. On the common are traces of a Roman camp, and near the spot several skirmishes took place during the civil war of Charles I. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £200, in the patron. of Christ Church, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, has been repaired and enlarged. The old church of St. Martin's has long since been demolished. The register dates from 1600. There is a school recently built, where the children are taught straw-plaiting.

WIGGINTON, a chplry. and tnshp. in the par. of Tamworth, co. Stafford, 2 miles N. of Tamworth, and 7 E. of Lichfield. It is situated on ground overlooking the vale of the Thame, which is crossed at Hopwas by a bridge. The chplry. includes the ecclesiastical district of St. Leonard's, and the hmlts. of Camberford, or Comberford, Dunstall, Coton, and Hopwas. The last-named village is on the opposite side of the Tame. At Coton are the Alder paper-mills. The Trent Valley line of railway passes through the township, on an embankment near Wigginton Lodge. The land is fertile, consisting of a rich loamy soil, and chiefly belonged to the late Sir R. Peel, Bart. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £100, in the patron. of the Vicar of Tamworth. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, was rebuilt in 1777, and enlarged in 1830. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Hopwas. At Wigginton are National schools, built in 1848, and at Hopwas a free school, founded in 1724.

WIGGINTON, a par. and tnshp. in the wap. of Bulmer, North Riding co. York, 4½ miles N. of York. The village is situated in the peculiar of Alme and Tollerton, a jurisdiction of the Dean and Chapter of York. The manor belongs to H. Baines, Esq. The soil is a strong clay. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of York, val. £300, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. There is a National school. The charities produce about £22 per annum.

WIGGLESWORTH, a tnshp. in the par. of Long Preston, wap. of Staincliff West, West Riding co. York, 6 miles S.W. of Settle, near the river Ribble. There is a medicinal spring impregnated with sulphur and iron. Earl de Grey is lord of the manor.

WIGGOLD, a tythg. in the par. of Cirencester, co. Gloucester, 2 miles N.E. of Cirencester.

WIGGONBY, a tnshp. in the par. of Acton, ward and co. of Cumberland, 4½ miles N.E. of Wigton, near Down Hall. Within the township is an ancient encampment, 180 feet square, now planted with fir and surrounded by a ditch.

WIGGONHOLT, a par. in the hund. of West Easwith, rape of Arundel, co. Sussex, 5 miles S.E. of Petworth, and 8 N.E. of Arundel. The parish is bounded on the W. by the river Arun, and traversed by the road from Petworth to Brighton. The greater portion of the land is meadow and pasture. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, val., with that of Greatham consolidated, £210. The church was repaired in 1839. Many Roman urns of red pottery, coins of the emperors, and other relics, were discovered here in 1827.

WIGHILL, a par. in the W. div. of York ainsty, West Riding co. York, 2½ miles N.W. of Tadcaster, its post town. The village is situated near the river Wharfe. Above half the land is in meadow and pasture, and the remainder arable, except 40 acres of woodland. The manor anciently belonged to the Stapleton family. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £120. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There are two schools. The principal residence is Wighill Park.

WIGHTERING. See WITTERING, co. Sussex.

WIGHT, ISLE OF, an island in the English Channel, off the S. coast, co. Hants, of which it forms part, and from which it is separated by an arm of the sea called the Solent. It extends between 50° 35′ and 50° 46′ N. lat., and between 1° 34′ and 1° 5′ W. long. In form it is an irregular rhomboid, the extreme length from the Needles Cliff to the Foreland being 22½ miles, and the greatest breadth 13½ miles, while the average does not exceed 6½. The circumference is 56 miles of coast, and its area 86,810 acres, or nearly 136 square miles. The original settlers of the Isle of Wight are probably to be found among the Celts. The island emerges from obscurity when it was brought under the yoke of the Romans, A.D. 43, who called it Vectis. The Roman occupation, of which traces remain in the villa and tesselated pavements still existing at Carisbrooke, lasted 400 years. In A.D. 530 it was united to the kingdom of Wessex, by the Saxons Kerdic and Kynric, after a severe battle at Wiht-garas-byrg, the modern Carisbrooke. In A.D. 686 Ceadwalla was the means of introducing the blessings of Christianity, by granting the fourth part of the island to Wilfrid of York, the Bishop of Selsey. William the Conqueror granted it, as an independent lordship, to his kinsman William Fitz-Osborne. The lordship was again granted by Henry I. to Richard de Redvers, and it remained to his descendants through a long series of De Redvers and De Vernons, till the reign of Edward I., when Isabella de Fortibus sold it to that king, A.D. 1293. From the period of the sale the island has been always attached to the crown of England. When the French Armada was fitted out by Francis I., A.D. 1545, for the invasion of England, the islanders repulsed with success the attempted occupation of the island. In A.D. 1647 Charles I., who had escaped from Hampton Court, entered the gateway of Carisbrooke Castle, the stronghold of the island, and remained in captivity here until his removal to Hurst Castle, two months before his execution at Whitehall. Since that time little historical interest is attached to the island. It now forms a magisterial division of Hampshire, and comprises the two liberties of East and West Medina, with 30 parishes. The towns are Newport, Ryde, Cowes, East and West, Yarmouth, Sandown, Freshwater, Brading, Newtown, and St. Helens, all which are noticed under their respective titles. The principal ports are Cowes, Ryde, and Yarmouth, to which steamboats ply constantly in connection with the railway stations on the mainland, but Newport is the capital and the only borough in the island, returning one member to parliament, Newtown and Yarmouth having been disfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832. The island also returns one member, the polling places being Ryde and Cowes. The population at the commencement of the present century was only 22,097, in 1851 it had increased to 50,324. During the summer season the population is about 20,000 extra, owing to the presence of numerous visitors, who resort here for sea-bathing and the attractions of yachting, of which Cowes is the centre, being the station of the Royal Yacht Squadron. The supply of provisions to the shipping at Spithead and in the Downs, gives employment to a considerable number of persons, but the prosperity of the island is mainly dependent on its attractions as a watering-place. Game is abundant, especially pheasants, and vast numbers of sea-fowl, choughs, puffins, razor-bills, and other seabirds resort to its cliffs in summer. The S. coast is bluff and precipitous, the chalk cliffs rising at Scratchell's bay to the height of 600 feet. The N. coast is more sheltered, and the shore is broken by bays and inlets on which are situated the seaports and the numerous watering-places. At "the Back of the Island," repeated landslips, occasioned by the action of springs on the soft marl, underlying the sandstone and chalk, have caused the cliffs to give way, thus forming a terrace called Undercliff, extending about 7 miles in length from near Bonchurch, past Ventnor, to Blackgang Chine. The climate of this sheltered spot, which is from a quarter of a mile to a mile wide, is so soft that myrtles, hydrangeas, geraniums, and other half-hardy plants, live out all the winter, and the fig is found growing wild. The general surface of the island is at a considerable elevation above the sea, and is intersected by a ridge of lofty chalk hills running from the Needles down through the centre of the island to Bambridge or Culver Cliff. The most lofty summits are St. Catherine's Hill, which is 830 feet above sea-level, and Dunnose, 792 feet. An extraordinary feature connected with the geological structure of the island is the almost vertical position of this central chalk ridge, while the strata on either side of it are horizontal, and scarcely appear to have been disturbed. To the N. lie the plastic clay sands, beds of shell marl, and the clays resembling those of the London basin; while to the S. the upper and lower green sandstone strata prevail, and are crossed by the Weald clay, containing numerous fossils of the Saurian species, and cyprides and cyclades shells. The principal streams are the Medina, which rises near the north-eastern foot of St. Catherine's hill, and falls into the sea between East and West Cowes, the Eastern Yar, or Brading river, the Western Yar, the Wootton and the Newtown river, all of which form small estuaries at their mouths.

WIGHTON, a par. in the hund. of North Greenhoe, co. Norfolk, 2 miles N. of Walsingham, and 3 S.E. of Wells. The village is situated on the road from Fakenham to Wells and on the river Stiffkey, which turns two mills, the one for flour, and the other for crushing bones. The land is chiefly arable, with a small proportion of pasture and woodland. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Norwich, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The charities produce about £90 per annum. The Earl of Leicester is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WIGLAND, a tnshp. in the par. of Malpas, co. Chester, 2 miles S.E. of Malpas. The inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the salt works at Northwich, where is a brine spring.

WIGLEY, a tythg. in the par. of Eling, co. Hants, 2½ miles S.W. of Romsey.

WIGMORE, a hund. in the N.W. div. of co. Hereford, contains the pars. of Aston, Bucknell, Burrington, Byton, Dounton, Elton, Upper Kinsham, Knill, Leinthall-Starkes, Leintwardine, Lingen, Presteigne, Titley, Wigmore, and parts of Aymestry, Brampton Bryan, Cascob, Old Radnor, and Stanton-upon-Arrow, comprising 48,070 acres.

WIGMORE, a par. in the above hund., co. Hereford, 7½ miles S.W. of Ludlow, 9 N.W. of Leominster, its post town, and 22 N.W. of Hereford. The village is situated on the road from Leominster to Knighton. At Darrold Hill are traces of a British encampment attributed to Caractacus, and on an eminence a little to the W. of the village are the ruins of a castle, once the head of an honour on the Welsh marches, which is recorded to have been rebuilt by Edward the Elder, and was taken by William the Conqueror from Edric the Saxon and given to Ranulph de Mortimer, Earl of Shrewsbury. The most perfect portions of the castle are the outer works. About a mile from the castle are the remains of an Austin Abbey founded in the middle of the 12th century by Hugh de Mortimer, and valued at the Dissolution at £302 12*s.* 3*d.* There was also a priory of nuns of the order of St. Augustine, and an alien priory founded as a cell to Aveney in Normandy. It was near this spot that the battle was fought on the Arrow in 1401, in which Mortimer was defeated and taken by Glendower. The surface is rocky but fertile, abounding in fossiliferous limestone, and coal is supposed to exist, but is not worked. In the village is a police station, where petty sessions are held fortnightly. A court leet is also held occasionally by Lady Langdale, who is lady of the manor. The par. includes part of the tnshp. of Limebrook. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £150, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. James, contains an antique font, an old register chest, and four painted windows, with figures of eight of the apostles. There are chapels for Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists, and National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £8 per annum. A fair is held on 5th August for cattle and sheep, and a statute fair on 6th May.

WIGMORE, a tnshp. in the par. of Westbury, co. Salop, 8 miles W. of Shrewsbury.

WIGSTHORPE, a hmlt. in the par. of Lilford, co. Northampton, 4 miles S. of Oundle.

WIGSTON MAGNA, a par. in the hund. of Guthlaxton, co. Leicester, 4 miles S.E. of Leicester. It is a station on the Midland Counties railway. The village, consisting of several streets, is situated on the road between Welford and Leicester, near the Union canal, and has recently been much improved. Gaol Close was used as a prison in the civil war of Charles I. The general trade is increasing, owing to the facility of railway communication, and many of the working people are employed in the hosiery manufacture. Near the village are a lunatic asylum, and some traces of a moated seat of the Davenports. The soil is a strong marly loam, producing excellent wheat and beans, and there are some tracts of luxuriant meadow land. The manor is divided between several proprietors. The principal residence is Wigston Hall, the seat of Captain C. H. Baddeley. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £120, in the patron. of the Haberdashers' Company and Christ's Hospital, London. There are two churches: that dedicated to All Saints is known as the New Church; the other church, long in ruins, has recently been restored, and now serves for the cemetery chapel. The Independents, Wesleyans, Primitive and Calvinistic Methodists have chapels, and there are National, British, and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £220 per annum, including £160, the endowment of E. Clarke's almshouses for eight aged persons.

WIGSTON PARVA, a chplry. in the par. of Claybrooke, hund. of Guthlaxton, co. Leicester, 6 miles N.W. of Lutterworth. The village is situated at the crossing of the Watling Street and Fosse Way. There is a chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Mary.

WIGTOFT, a par. in the wap. of Kirton, parts of Holland, co. Lincoln, 3 miles S.E. of Swineshead, 7 S.W. of Boston, and 2 from Algarkirk railway station. The vil. and par. include the hmlts. of Burtoft and Hoffleet, or Hoftlet Stow. The soil is a rich loam, and the lands are under excellent cultivation. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. with that of Quadring annexed £412, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a free school, founded by W. Blisbury in 1714, which has an endowment of £60 per annum, and was rebuilt in 1830. The other charities consist of poor's land, producing £30 per annum.

WIGTON, a par. and market town in the ward of Allerdale-below-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 10 miles S.W. of Carlisle, and 305 N.W. of London. It is a station on the Maryport and Carlisle railway. This place was a manor or barony before the Norman Conquest, when it was given by William de Meschines to Waltheof, Lord of Allerdale, and by him to Odoard, surnamed De Wigton. It was burnt by the Scots in 1322, when they plundered the abbey of Holme-Cultram, and during the civil war was occupied by the van of the Duke of Hamilton's army in 1648. The manor or barony now belongs to Lord Leconfield, who holds a court leet and baron annually in September, at which constables are appointed, but the government of the town is vested in the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions fortnightly on Tuesday. It is likewise a polling place for the county elections, and the seat of a New County Court, superintendent registry, and Poor-law Union, embracing 31 parishes or places. The par., measuring more than 5 miles in length by 3 in breadth, contains, besides the town of Wigton, the tnshps. of Oulton, Waverton and Woodside, and the hmlts. of Akehead, Waterside, Lesson-hall, Wood-row, Howrigg, and East and West Woodside. The population in 1861 of the parish was 6,023, and of the town 4,011. The town consists principally of one spacious street, crossed by a narrower one at the lower end. It is pitched with pebbles, and contains some good houses. The principal public institutions are the mechanics' institute, recently erected, containing a library and news-rooms; gas works, erected in 1831; 3 branch banks, union poor-house, clerical library, attached to the church, and townhall. At a short distance from the town pass the rivers Waver and Wampool, upon which are several corn-mills. The principal articles manufactured are checks, ginghams, muslins, and other cotton goods; also print and dye works, tanneries, breweries, nail-making, and the timber trade. Coal is obtained about 3 miles from the town, and there are traces of copper and other metals within 5 miles. The land is generally level, and lies low, but is dry and fertile. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £300, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is said to have been originally erected by Odoard, shortly after the Conquest, with materials brought from a neighbouring Roman station, Olenacum, or Old Carlisle, and subsequently belonged to the abbey of Holme-Cultram, but was taken down in 1788, and the present edifice erected on its site. A stained-glass window, the gift of William Banks, Esq., of Highmoor House, has lately been put in the E. end of the parish church. Christ Church, capable of accommodating 150 persons, was built in 1865 at Waverton, as a chapel-of-ease to the mother church. It contains two stained-glass windows. The E. window has in the centre a figure of our Saviour on the cross; the two side figures are St. Peter and St. Paul. The W. window is circular, containing 7 circular lights, one being in the centre, containing 7 symbols of Christ —the lily, the rose, the lion, the apple or citron, the eagle, vine, and the "morning star" in the centre. There are chapels for Wesleyans, Independents, United Presbyterians, and Society of Friends, and a Gothic chapel, designed by Bonomi, belonging to the Roman Catholics. The free grammar school at Market-hill, near the entrance of the town, was founded in 1730, and has an income from endowment of about £70 per annum. There are also National, British, and denominational Sunday schools, and a school at Brookfield House belonging to the Society of Friends. Ewan Clarke, the Cumberland poet; R. Smirke, R.A., the historical painter; George Barnes, the mathematician; Joseph Rooke, the self-taught weaver; and John Rooke, the writer on political economy and geology, were born here. Market day is on Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 20th February for horses and cattle, 5th April for cattle and merchandise, St. Thomas's Day for meat, apples, and honey, and statute fairs on the Tuesdays after Whit Sunday and Martinmas for hiring servants.

WIGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Harewood, upper div. of Skyrack wap., West Riding co. York, 5 miles N.E. of Leeds. It includes the hmlts. of Brandon and Alwoodley Gate.

WIGTON, a par., post and market town, seaport, royal and parliamentary burgh, and the chief town of Wigtonshire, Scotland. The par., which is situated near the eastern border of the county, contains, besides the town of Wigton, the post-office vil. of Bladenoch. It is bounded on the N. by Penningham, on the E. by Wigton Bay, or the estuary of the Cree, which is from 1½ mile to 2¾ miles broad, but dry at low water, and on the S. and S.W. by the river Bladenoch, which divides it from Kirkinner. Its length from E. to W. is 5 miles, and its greatest breadth about 4 miles. The land in the north-eastern part of the parish is an almost uninterrupted level, but the more inland districts both to the N. and S., are hilly, and in parts covered with moor and moss. The soil of the low grounds near Wigton Bay is a kind of indurated silt intermixed with marine shells, and is in part boggy, but a great portion has been reclaimed, and is now good arable land; while the soil of the upland portions is light and dry, and has recently been much improved by drainage. The irreclaimable lands are principally in the north-western district. The prevailing rocks are graywacke and graywacke slate. The principal landowners are the Earls of Galloway and Stair. The town of Wigton occupies a small table-land near the beach of Wigton Bay, and about 3 furlongs N. of the mouth of the river Bladenoch. It is 7 miles S. of Newton-Stewart, and 11 N. of Whithorn, and has steamboat communication with Garlieston and Liverpool by means of the Galloway Steam Navigation Company's vessels, while a short branch line of rail communicates with the Port Patrick railway. The streets are clean, and many of the houses modern. Its principal locality is a parallelogram about 250 yards long, laid out in walks and drives, with an artificial circular bank at the upper end cut into a series of terraces or concentric sward seats. Diverging from this central green or park are three main streets, straight, and well kept, besides three minor streets. The principal public buildings are the market cross, the townhall, or county buildings, containing the court-room, assembly room, and subscription library, and the county gaol. The Wigton Academy and the Wigton Normal School are also good edifices. The town has offices of the British Linen Company's Bank, the City of Glasgow Bank, and the Edinburgh and Glasgow Bank. The population of the municipal burgh in 1851 was 2,232, and of the parliamentary 2,121, but in 1861 it had decreased to 2,025, inhabiting 395 houses. Wigton unites with Whithorn, Stranraer, and New Galloway in returning one member to parliament. The constituency in 1856 was 109. It is governed by a provost, 2 bailies, a treasurer, and 15 common councillors. The harbour admits vessels of 300 tons. The principal trade is with the ports of the W. coast of England, in the importation of coals and exportation of agricultural produce, and in supply of the adjacent country. It has a custom-house establishment, a gas company, masonic lodge, and several benevolent and religious institutions. The castle, supposed to have been built about the close of the 12th century, is now in ruins. This par. is the seat of a presb. in the synod of Galway. The minister's stipend is £290. The parish church was built in 1853. The old church, situated a little to the E. of the town, was originally dedicated to St. Machute, a British saint, and was given by Edward Bruce, lord of Galloway, to the canons of Whithorn; it is now surrounded by the public cemetery. There are also a Free church and a United Presbyterian church. The principal schools are the Wigton Academy and Normal School, mentioned above, and the Wigton charity school, all partly supported by the town council.

WIGTONSHIRE, a maritime county of Scotland, occupying its south-western extremity. It is bounded on the E. by the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright and by Wigton Bay, on the S. and W. by the Irish Sea, and on the N. by the co. of Ayr. The extent of the shire from N. to S. is about 30 miles, and, including Luce Bay, its breadth is about the same, the superficial area comprising 288,960 acres, of which a little above one-third is under cultivation. In former times it formed the western district of the province of Galloway, and was inhabited by the British tribe of the Novantes, whose principal town was Leucophibia, now Whithorn, and their principal port, Retigonius, now Loch Ryan. On the departure of the Romans from Britain, the inhabitants of the S. are supposed to have constructed the ancient wall, or rampart, which, under the name of the Deil's Dyke, may be traced from Loch Ryan to Bowness in Cumberland, where it joined the Great Wall of Hadrian. There are but few other prehistoric and Roman remains, the most curious being the standing stones of Torrhouse, in the parish of Wigton. These stones are 19 in number—one of unwrought granite—and stand upright in a circle, with several others at a little distance to the S. and E., and in the neighbourhood two cairns.—In the sixth century the Anglo-Saxons overran the district, and Oswig, the Northumbrian king, had a palace at Whithorn. During the 9th and 10th centuries, the country on the W. was overrun by the Picts from Ireland and the Isle of Man, and hence the name of Galloway, or "the country of the Gael," was given to the whole of the south-western corner of Scotland, which continued independent of the Scottish kings till the reign of Alexander II. In the wars of Bruce and Baliol, the chieftains of Galloway were attached to the party of the latter, whose family they sheltered after Edward Bruce had subdued the rest of Scotland. The family of Douglas subsequently became possessed of the lordship of Galloway, but in 1455 the title became extinct, and a portion of the estates passed to the Maxwells of Nithsdale. It now gives the title of earl to the family of Stewart and Garlies. The Gaelic dress, manners, and language lingered here long after they had fallen into desuetude in the rest of the Lowlands. There were monasteries at Whithorn, Wigton, Soulseat, and Glenluce.—No part of the county is above 13 miles from the sea, the coast line being deeply indented by several spacious bays. Wigton Bay, on the E., diminishes from a width of 8 miles until it terminates in the river Cree. The Bay of Luce indents the land to the extent of 15 miles, and forms two promontories: at the southern extremity of the western projection is the Mull of Galloway, while the apex of the eastern is called Burrow Head; these two peninsular headlands are also known by the Celtic name of the Rhinns or Rhyns of Galloway. On the N.W. another promontory is made by the intrusion of Loch Ryan, which here forms a safe and commodious harbour, extending into the country about 8 miles, and varying in breadth from 4 to 2 miles. This district is divided into Upper and Lower Galloway, the northern, or higher, and the southern, or lower parts of the shire. The surface, though hilly, is less elevated above the level of the sea than any other county of Scotland. The principal eminences are Mull Hill, Montlokoure, Bunman, Cairnhill, Cairn of Dolt, and Grennan Hill, which vary from 400 to 900 feet in height. The best lands lie near the shores; the inland districts, including the moors, which comprise above one-third of the whole county, being more elevated, and largely mixed with heath and moss. The prevailing rocks belong to the primary transition, and secondary schists, comprising graywacke, slate, argillaceous schist, and a little sandstone in the northern part of the "Rhinns." There are little or no limestone and coal in the county, and though iron stone is abundant, the absence of coal renders it of comparatively little value. There are quarries of slate of different qualities, and lead mines were formerly wrought.—The chief rivers are the Cree and Bladenoch, both partially navigable. The former rises in Ayrshire, and separates this county from Kirkcudbright before it falls into Wigton Bay; and the latter, after a circuitous course of 24 miles, falls into the same bay. The other streams of the county, including the river Luce, are comparatively insignificant, but abound in salmon and trout, and mostly descend to the Irish Sea. The fresh-water lochs are numerous but small, the largest being Dowalton in the Machers, about 2 miles long by 1½ mile broad.—In early times this district, like most other sections of the country, was covered with wood, but was fast becoming bleak and barren, when the extensive plantations of the Earl of Stair were undertaken at the commencement of the present century. The salutary improvements in agriculture inaugurated in this part of Scotland by the Agricultural Society of Dumfries, have so reformed the spirit and practice of husbandry in this shire, that rents have rapidly risen, draining is scientifically carried out, the most improved implements and artificial manures are in general use. The exports are corn, agricultural produce, black cattle, sheep, wool, and a choice breed of horses, distinguished by the appellation of "Galloways," which are said to be of Spanish, or rather Moorish, extraction. The coasting trade of this county is considerable, and is steadily increasing, as are likewise the fisheries connected with the numerous bays and lochs. The principal ports are Stranraer, Whithorn, and Wigtown, which are also royal and parliamentary burghs; and Portpatrick, a burgh of barony, which last was, until recently, the station of the mail steam-packets communicating with Ireland. There are, besides, a number of small seaports or natural harbours. The other towns, which are also burghs of barony, are, Newton-Stewart, Garlieston, and Glenluce, besides several thriving villages.—The population of the county in 1851 was 43,389, and in 1861, 42,038, having nearly doubled since the commencement of the present century, when it was only 22,918. The county returns one member to parliament, and one member is returned by the Wigton district of burghs, consisting of Stranraer, Wigton, Whithorn, and New Galloway. Its constituency in 1856 was 1,359. The sheriff court of the county is held at Wigton every Tuesday and Friday during session, the commissary court on every Tuesday during session, and the sheriff small-debts court also on every Tuesday during session; a sheriff small-debts court is likewise held at Stranraer ten times a year. Quarter sessions are held at Wigton on the first Tuesdays of March and May, and on the last Tuesday of October, and at Glenluce on the first Tuesday of August. The bishopric of Galloway, or Whithorn, was one of the oldest in Scotland. At the Reformation, there were 21 parishes, churches, and several chapels, but there are now only 17 parishes. Eight of the eastern parishes, along with Kirkmabreck and Minigaff, in the adjoining county of Kirkcudbright, form the presbytery of Wigton; and nine parishes in the W., with Ballantrae and Colmonell in Carrick, form the presbytery of Stranraer, both in the synod of Galloway. The number of places of worship reported in the census of 1851 was 52, viz., 18 belonging to the Established Kirk, 14 to the Free Church, 10 to the United Presbyterians, 4 to the Roman Catholics, and 1 each to the Episcopalians and Independents.—The county is traversed by the railway from Dumfries to Portpatrick, and by several well-laid-out lines of roads, the principal being that from Wigton, Brough, Newton-Stewart, to Kirkcudbright and Dumfries, another through Glenluce to the Mull of Galloway and Portpatrick, and a third through Port William to Monrieth, or by Garlieston to Whithorn and Burrowhead. The chief seats are, Galloway House, of the Earl of Galloway; Culhorn and Castle Kennedy, of the Earl of Stair; Lochnaw, of Agnew, Bart.; Wigton Park and Dunragget, of Hay, Bart.; Ardwell, of M'Taggart, Bart.; Monrieth, of Maxwell, Bart.; Loch-Ryan, of Wallace, Bart.; Whithorn Castle, of Reid, Bart., besides numerous residences of the private gentry.

WIGWIG, a tnshp. in the par. of Much-Wenlock, co. Salop, 2 miles N.W. of Much-Wenlock. It is joined with Harley.

WIKE, a tnshp. in the par. of Birstall, wap. of Morley, West Riding co. York, 3 miles S.W. of Bradford, of which it may be considered a suburb.

WIKE, a tnshp. partly in the par. of Bardsey, but chiefly in that of Harewood, upper div. of Skyrack wap., West Riding co. York, 6 miles N.E. of Leeds.

WILBARSTON, a par. in the hund. of Corby, co. Northampton, 4 miles S.W. of Rockingham, and 5 E. of Market Harborough. The vil. includes the hmlt. of Pipewell. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £250. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There are a chapel for Independents and a National school. The manor belongs to the Hon. R. Watson, of Rockingham. The charities produce about £12 per annum, including the school endowment.

WILBERFOSS, a par. in the Wilton Beacon div. of Harthill wap., East Riding co. York, 4½ miles N.W. of Pocklington, and 8 E. of York. The village is situated on the road from York to Hull, and on a small stream falling into the Derwent. The par. includes the tnshp. and vil. of Newton-upon-Derwent, and is situated on the eastern acclivity of the vale of the navigable river Derwent. This place gives name to the family of Wilberforce, who were seated here till 1710, when their ancient mansion and estate were sold. A Benedictine nunnery was founded here by Alan de Catton in the middle of the 12th century, and was valued at the Dissolution at £28 8*s.* 8*d.*, and the site given in 1554 to G. Gale. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £70. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, contains the effigies of Sir Robert Hoton and his lady, of the 15th century, an antique font, and an old register. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there is a village school supported by children's payments. The charities produce about £25 per annum. Colonel Wyndham is lord of the manor of Wilberfoss and Catton.

WILBRAHAM, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Staine, co. Cambridge, 7 miles S.E. of Cambridge, and 1½ mile N.E. of the Fulbourn station on the Cambridge and Newmarket railway. The village is situated about 2 miles S. of the Cambridge and Newmarket road. The surface is nearly level in the western part of the parish, but rises towards the S. The soil is light but fertile, resting upon a substratum of chalk and gravel. The manor-house, now the residence of E. Hicks, Esq., is called the Temple, having once belonged to the Knights Templars. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £203. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. There is a small Baptist chapel, and a National school.

WILBRAHAM, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Staine, co. Cambridge, 1 mile N. of Great Wilbraham. The par. includes the hmlt. of Six-mile Bottom. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £330, in the patron. of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, contains a brass of W. Blackway, bearing date 1521. There is a National school. The charities produce about £75 per annum, including Johnson's bequest for the poor, and about 30 acres of common. Many Saxon antiquities were discovered in an ancient churchyard here in October, 1851.

WILBRIGHTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Gnosall, co. Stafford, 7 miles S.W. of Stafford.

WILBURTON, a par. in the hund. of South Witchford, Isle of Ely, co. Cambridge, 5 miles S.W. of Ely, and 1½ mile from Haddenham. It is a station on the Ely, Haddenham, and Sutton branch of the Great Eastern railway. The village is surrounded by fens, now drained and in high cultivation. The soil is rich and fertile, varying from red sand to stiff clay on the upper ground. The manor belongs to Lady Pell, who has a seat here. This place, which was formerly a Roman station, has for many centuries belonged to the ancestors of Lord Willoughby d'Eresby, of Grimsthorpe, who took their family name from it, but their title from Eresby, near Spilsby. The par. includes the hmlts. of Bonthorpe, Butter Bump, Habertoft, Hasthorpe, Hogsbeck, Mawthorpe, Sandfield, Sloothby, and Wyche. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £1,200. The church, dedicated to St. Helen, has a stained E. window in three compartments, an octangular font, and an altar tomb with the recumbent effigy of a Knight Templar. The register commences in 1538. There is a chapel for Wesleyans, and a charity school founded in 1728 by Anthony Barnes. To the W. of the village are remains of a Roman camp.

WILLOUGHBY, a par. and watering-place in the Rugby div. of Knightlow hund., co. Warwick, 3 miles S.E. of Dunchurch, and 6 S. of Rugby. It is supposed to have been a Roman station from the many Roman antiquities discovered in the neighbourhood, and is mentioned in Domesday survey as Wilebei, or Wilbere, from which its present name is derived. The village, which is situated on the main road from London to Holyhead, near the Grand Junction canal and river Leam, was formerly of more importance than at present, and had a market and fair. In the present century it has been again growing into notice, owing to the discovery of sulphurous and saline springs similar to those of Harrogate. The spa, which is situated about a mile from the village, has a pump-room and baths. The land is in a high state of cultivation. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £220, in the patron. of Magdalen College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, contains several ancient monuments, brasses, and effigies of the Clerke family, and a window at the W. end. There are a chapel for Primitive Methodists and an endowed National school founded in 1816. The charities produce near £500 per annum, including the school endowment.

WILLOUGHBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Norwell, co. Notts, 6 miles N.W. of Newark-upon-Trent.

WILLOUGHBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Walesby, co. Notts, 3 miles N.E. of Ollerton.

WILLOUGHBY-ON-THE-WOLDS, a par. and tnshp. in the S. div. of Rushcliffe wap., co. Notts, 9 miles N.E. of Loughborough, and 11 S.E. of Nottingham. It is situated on a branch of the river Soar, about half a mile S.E. of the ancient Fosse Way, where pavements, coins, and other antiquities have been found at a spot called Herrings. It is supposed by Horsley to be the site of the Roman station Verometum, but Gale and Stukeley place Margidunum here. In the parliamentary war of Charles I. an engagement took place at Willoughby Field. The soil is chiefly a cold clay, and above two-thirds of the land is in pasture. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £90. The church, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, has recently been repaired, and has in the interior several brasses and effigies, and monuments of the Stanhope and Willoughby families. The charities produce about £9 per annum.

WILLOUGHBY, SCOTT, a par. in the wap. of Avoland, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 3½ miles N.W. of Folkingham. The parish is situated on the road between Grantham and Donington. There is no village, only three farmhouses. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £125. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was rebuilt in the early part of the present century. Earl Brownlow is lord of the manor.

WILLOUGHBY, SILK, a par. in the wap. of Aswardhurn, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 2 miles S.W. of Sleaford, and 12 N.E. of Grantham. It was anciently termed North Willoughby, but received the adjunct Silk in the 16th century, upon occasion of the hamlet of Silkby being joined to it. The village is situated on the road from Sleaford to Falkingham. Bricks and tiles are made. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £625. The church, dedicated to St. Denis, contains an antique Norman font, three stalls, some screen work of wood, and fragments of stained glass in the E. window. The register commences in 1470. There is a parochial school. The Earl of Dysart is lord of the manor.

WILLOUGHBY, WATERLESS, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of Guthlaxton, co. Leicester, 6 miles N.E. of Lutterworth, 8 S.W. of Leicester, and 2 from the Countesthorpe station on the Midland Counties railway. The village is situated on a feeder of the river Soar. The manufacture of stockings is carried on to a small extent. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £400. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an antique font and sedilia. There is a National school. The Rev. Lomax Mills is lord of the manor.

WILLOUGHBY, WEST, a hmlt. in the par. of Ancaster, co. Lincoln, 5 miles S.W. of Sleaford.

WILLOUGHTON, a par. in the wap. of West Aslacoe, parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 6 miles S. of Kirton-in-Lindsey, and 7 N.E. of Gainsborough railway station. The village is situated in the Wolds near the line of the ancient Ermine Street. The land lies low, but is fertile. The greater part of the town formerly belonged to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory here, which from that order came to the Hospitallers, and at the Dissolution its revenue was estimated at £219 19*s.* 8*d.* The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £200. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels, and there is a National school. The Earl of Scarborough is lord of the manor.

WILLOWBECK, a feeder of the river Swale, rises near Cundall, North Riding co. York.

WILLSBOROUGH, an ext. par. place in the hund. of Sparkenhoe, co. Leicester, 2½ miles S.W. of Market-Bosworth.

WILLS-PASTURES, an ext. par. lib. in the Southam div. of Knightlow hund., co. Warwick, adjoining Lower Hodnet.

WILLSTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Cardington, co. Salop, 3 miles E. of Church Stretton.

WILLSWORTHY, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Peter Tavy, co. Devon, 6 miles N. of Tavistock, on the river Tamar.

WILLY. See WILY and WYLYE, co. Wilts.

WILLYBROOK, a hund. in the N.E. div. of co. Northampton, contains the pars. of Apethorpe, Colley Weston, Cotterstock, Duddington, Easton, Fotheringhay, Glapthorn, Kingscliffe, Nassington, Southwick, Tansor, Wood Newton, Yarwell, and part of Sutton, comprising together 27,490.

WILLYBROOK, a feeder of the river Nene, rises near Dene, co. Northampton.

WILMINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Longbridge, rape of Pevensey, co. Sussex, 4 miles S.W. of Hailsham, 6 from Eastbourne, and 1 mile from the Berwick station on the Brighton and South Coast railway. The village is situated on the north-eastern declivity of the South Downs, near the river Cuckmere, and on the road from Lewes to Eastbourne. It had formerly a Benedictine priory, founded in the reign of William II. as a cell to the abbey of Grestein in Normandy, which at the suppression of alien priories was sold by licence of Henry IV. to the Dean and Chapter of Chichester, towards founding a chantry in that cathedral. This place gives title of baron to the Marquis of Northampton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £110. The church is dedicated to SS. Mary and Peter. The register commences in 1538.

WILMINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Axton, Dartford, and Wilmington, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. Kent, 1½ mile S. of Dartford. The village lies a little off the road to Sevenoaks, near the river Darent, and is surrounded by gardens and cherry orchards. The celebrated Earl of Warwick in the reign of Edward IV. resided at the manor-house. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £300, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Rochester. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There is a National school. A fair is held on the 23rd of April.

WILMINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Chirbury, co. Salop, 8 miles N.W. of Bishop's Castle.

WILMINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Sulcoates, wap. of Harthill, East Riding co. York, 3 miles from Hull. It is a station on the Hull and Hornsea branch of the North-Eastern railway.

WILMINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Priston, co. Somerset, 4 miles S.W. of Bath.

WILMSLOW, a par. in the hund. of Macclesfield, co. Chester, 7 miles N.W. of Macclesfield, and 6 from Stockport. It is a station on the Manchester, Stockport, and Crewe section of the London and North-Western railway. The village is situated in the vale of the river Bollin, here crossed by a railway viaduct of eleven arches. The par. comprises the tnshps. of Bollin Fee, Pownall Fee, Fulshaw, and Chorley. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton and silk mills. The surface is undulating, and the soil fertile, with a considerable proportion of rich pasture. The soil is red and grey marl. The road from Manchester to Birmingham passes through the parish. The manor was anciently held under the Earls of Chester by the Fittons, of Pownall, from whom it passed by marriage to the Venables, of Kinderton, and from them to the Booths, of Dunham Massey; it now belongs to Sir Humphrey de Trafford and John Clarke Prescott, Esq., who are the chief landowners. A court baron is held by the Traffords in Pownall Fee, and another by the Earl of Stamford and Warrington. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £1,000. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, contains a carved oak roof and several mortuary chapels, with brasses, effigies, and altar tombs. The Independents, Wesleyans, Calvinistic Methodists, Unitarians, and Society of Friends have chapels. There are National and Sunday schools. Races are held annually in September.

WILNCOTT, a hmlt. in the pars. of Aston Cantlow and Old Stratford, co. Warwick, 3 miles N.W. of Stratford-on-Avon, on the Birmingham canal.

WILNE, a hmlt. in the par. of Morleston, co. Derby, 7 miles S.E. of Derby, and 4 S.W. of the Sawley railway station. The parish is situated on the Trent and Mersey canal, near the confluence of the rivers Derwent and Trent. It contains the libs. of Wilne Church, and Draycott, and the chplries. of Breaston and Risley, and the hmlt. of Hopwell. There are cotton mills and salt works, also the workhouse for the Chardlow Union. The living is a perpet. cur., annexed to the vic. of Sawley. The church is dedicated to St. Chad.

WILNECOTE, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Tamworth, Hemlingford hund., co. Warwick, 2 miles S.E. of Tamworth. It is a station on the West Midland railway. This place, anciently called Willowencote, is situated near the river Tame, on the ancient Watling Street. There are collieries and lime-kilns. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £100, in the patron. of the Vicar of Tamworth. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was rebuilt in 1821.

WILNE, GREAT, or FAR, a tnshp. in the par. of Ashton-on-Trent, adjoining the parish of Wilne.

WILNE, LITTLE, a chplry. in the par. of Sawley, hund. of Morleston, co. Derby, 8 miles S.E. of Derby. It includes Draycott liberty.

WILPSHIRE, a tnshp. in the par. and hund. of Blackburn, co. Lancaster, 3 miles N.E. of Blackburn.

WILSDEN, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Bradford, wap. of Morley, West Riding co. York, 5 miles from Bradford, and 3 from Bingley station on the Leeds and Bradford railway. This place, which forms part of the honour of Pontefract, is situated on the river Aire, and contains the vils. or hmlts. of Cullingworth Gate, Lingbob, Manuels, Manuels Heights, and Hallas Bridge. The ecclesiastical district also includes part of the tnshps. of Allerton and North Bierley. Worsted spinning and the manufacture of stuffs are carried on, and there are extensive collieries. The population of the ecclesiastical district in 1861 was 4,426, and of the tnshp. 2,888. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £150, in the patron. of the Vicar of Bradford. The district church is dedicated to St. Matthew. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. W. B. Ferrand, Esq., is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WILSFORD, a par. in the wap. of Winnibriggs, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 4½ miles S.W. of Sleaford, and 9 N.E. of Grantham. It is situated on the banks of a rivulet near the ancient Ermine Street. The par. includes part of the vil. of Ancaster, and the hmlt. of Hanbeck. In the reign of Stephen, Hugo de Wake founded a priory here as a cell to the Abbey of Bec in Normandy, which on the suppression of alien priories was given to Bourn Abbey, and at the Dissolution came to Charles Duke of Suffolk. A freestone, known as Ancaster stone, is extensively quarried on the heath, which was inclosed in 1775. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £600. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The register commences in 1479. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel.

WILSFORD, a par. in the hund. of Swanborough, co. Wilts, 6 miles S.W. of Pewsey, and 7 S.E. of Devizes. It is situated on the river Severn, and is frequently written Wivelsford and Wilsford Dauntsey. The par. includes the tythg. of Manningford-Bohun and the hmlt. of Cottenham. The living is a vic.,* val. £250, in the patron. of St. Nicholas Hospital, at Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. Sir Francis Astley is lord of the manor.

WILSFORD, a par. in the hund. of Underditch, co. Wilts, 2 miles S.W. of Amesbury, and 7 N. of Salisbury. The par. is bounded on the E. by the river Avon, and includes the tythg. of Bottesford and part of the hmlt. of Manningford-Bohun. The soil is a light loam, and the land chiefly arable, with some good water meadow. On the downs are many barrows. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. with that of Woodford annexed, £250, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was repaired in 1868. The Baptists have a chapel.

WILSHAMPSTEAD, a par. in the hund. of Redbornestoke, co. Beds, 4 miles S.E. of Bedford. The village is traversed by the road between Bedford and Luton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £350. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was erected in the reign of Henry VII., and had once a tower, which fell down in 1742. It contains a brass of a priest bearing date 1450. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The charities produce about £31, of which £20 is the endowment of Wells' school.

WILSICK, a tnshp. in the par. of Tickhill, West Riding, co. York, joined to Stancill.

WILSILL, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Bishopside, par. of Ripon, West Riding co. York, 2 miles S.E. of Pateley Bridge, on the river Nidd.

WILSONTON, a vil. in the par. of Carnwarth, co. Lanark, Scotland, 8 miles N.E. of Lanark, and 3 W. of Auchengray station on the Caledonian railway. It is situated on Mouse Water, and on the road from Lanark to West Calder. It was founded in 1779 by the Messrs. Wilson, who introduced the manufacture of iron. It rapidly grew into a small town, but the trade having suddenly declined, it is now of little importance.

WILSTHORPE, a hmlt. in the par. of Sawley, hund. of Morleston, co. Derby, 7 miles S.E. of Derby, near the rivers Trent and Derwent.

WILSTHORPE, a chplry. in the par. of Greatford, wap. of Ness, co. Lincoln, 6 miles N.E. of Stamford, and 5 N.W. of Market-Deeping, near the river Glen.

WILSTHORPE, a tnshp. in the par. of Bridlington, East Riding co. York, 2 miles S. of Bridlington. It is situated near the coast, and is joined to Hilderthorpe.

WILSTONE, a hmlt. in the par. of Tring, co. Herts, 2 miles N.W. of Tring, near the Aylesbury canal.

WILSTROP, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirk-Hammerton, E. div. of York ainsty, co. York, 7 miles N.W. of York, near the river Nidd.

WILTON, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough in the hund. of Branch and Dole, co. Wilts, 3 miles N.W. of Salisbury, and 85 from London. It has stations on the London and South-Western and Salisbury branch of the Great Western railways. This place is supposed by Baxter to have been the Caer Guilo of the Britons, but was changed to Wilton by the Saxons from the river Willey, or Will, on which it is situated at its confluence with the Nadder. Under the West Saxons it became a place of such note as to give name to the shire, and early in the 10th century was chosen as the seat of the diocese of Wells, and so continued during the lives of 11 bishops, till 1050. It was the scene of the defeat of the Mercians by Egbert in 823, and of the Danes by Alfred in 871; but was burnt by Sweyn the Dane in 1003, and again by the army of the Empress Matilda in 1143, who took it from Stephen. It was afterwards rebuilt, and in the 23rd of Edward I. was summoned as a borough to return two members to parliament. Queen Elizabeth visited it in 1579, and Prince Henry in 1603, when for a short space it became the residence of the court. With the rise of New Sarum, or Salisbury, it began gradually to decline, notwithstanding the introduction of the manufacture of carpets by Duffosy, a Frenchman, who first brought over into England this branch of industry, under the Herberts, in the reign of Elizabeth. By the Reform Act of 1832 the bounds of the borough were greatly extended, and the number of members reduced to one instead of two, as from the reign of Edward I. The chief influence is with the Earl of Pembroke, of Wilton Castle—rebuilt by Wyatt, and altered from designs of Holbein and Inigo Jones by Sir W. Herbert, afterwards Earl of Pembroke, on the site of the ancient abbey, originally founded by Wulstan, Earl of Wiltshire, in 773. In this mansion is a collection of paintings and old marble sculpture; also the library where Sir Philip Sidney is said to have written the "Arcadia." Wilton is a borough by prescription, having been first chartered by Henry I., and is now governed by a corporation consisting of a high steward, mayor, who is also returning officer, recorder, five aldermen, and a number of burgesses, of whom the mayor and recorder are magistrates. The town hall is the principal public edifice in the town, which consists of one long street. The population of the parish in 1861 was 1,930, and of the borough 8,657, inhabiting 1,814 houses. It has long been celebrated for the manufacture of carpets, but the only factory at present in operation is that of Messrs. Blackmore and Lapworth, which employs about 500 hands, and made the Axminster carpet exhibited at the Great Exhibition of 1851, from Gruner's designs. Wilton gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of Sarum. The living is a rect.,* val. with Bulbridge, Ditchampton, and Netherhampton annexed, £400, besides 22 acres, 2 roods, 29 poles of glebe. The church of SS. Mary and Nicholas, recently erected in lieu of the old one by Wyatt and Brandon, at the cost of £25,000, defrayed by the late Right Hon. Sir Sidney Herbert, is 156 feet in length, with a campanile tower 120 feet high, connected with the body of the structure by a corridor. It is in the Lombard style of architecture, with a western doorway, stained windows, stone pulpit supported by 16 black marble pillars, carved stone screen, chancel paved with Italian agates and marble, and inlaid mosaic work brought from the Church of Santa Maria Maggiore. The charities produce about £350 per annum, including the bequests of R. Sumption, Esq., whose will hangs up in the town-hall. The Dissenters have chapels, and there are a free school, Sunday-school, and St. John's Hospital—the last founded in 1190, by Archbishop Hubert, for a prior or clergyman, and five aged persons. It is the head of a Poor-law Union of 22 parishes, the workhouse for which is situated in the parish of Newton, and of a superintendent registry, but belongs to the Salisbury New County Court district. Market days, now nearly obsolete, are Wednesday and Saturday, but the sheep fairs, held on the 4th May and 12th September, are some of the largest in England.

WILTON, a par. in the district of Hawick, co. Roxburgh, Scotland. It comprises the vils. of Dean and Appletree-Hall, and part of the town of Hawick. It extends in length upwards of 5 miles, with an extreme breadth of 4 miles. The surface is hilly, and is for the most part in an excellent state of cultivation. Limestone and marl are abundant. The parish is traversed by the road from Edinburgh to Carlisle, and contains the terminus of the Hawick railway. It is watered by the river Teviot, which is crossed by an old bridge near the principal street in Wilton suburb. This par. is in the presb. of Jedburgh, synod of Merse and Teviotdale. The stipend of the minister is about £294. The parish church was erected in 1762, enlarged in 1801, and restored in 1829. There is a parochial school. The principal seat is Wilton Lodge.

WILTON, a tythg. in the par. of Great Bedwin, co. Wilts, 5 miles S.W. of Hungerford.

WILTON, a par. in the hund. of Taunton, co. Somerset, half a mile S.W. of Taunton, of which it is a suburb, containing the gaol and house of correction. There was formerly a hospital built by one of the bishops of Winchester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £200. The church, dedicated to St. George, was formerly a chapel-of-ease to the vic. of St. Mary Magdalene, in Taunton.

WILTON. See HOCKWOLD-CUM-WILTON, co. Norfolk.

WILTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Haile, co. Cumberland, 2 miles E. of Egremont.

WILTON, a hmlt. in the bar. of Clonkee, co. Cavan, Ireland, 2 miles S.E. of Ballieborough.

WILTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirk-Leatham, E. div. of Langbaurgh lib., North Riding co. York, 3 miles N.W. of Guisborough, 3 from Redcar, and 8 from Stockton. At Lazenby, in this township, is a station on the Stockton and Darlington railway. This township, which is situated on the road from Stockton to Redcar, is bounded on the N. by the German Ocean, and contains the hmlts. of Lackenby and Lazenby. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £150. The church is dedicated to St. Cuthbert. Sir J. H. Lowther, Bart., is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WILTON, an ancient castle of the Greys, on the river Wye, co. Hereford, 1 mile W. of Ross. From this now ruined castle the Egertons of Heaton Castle take the titles of Earl and Viscount Grey de Wilton.

WILTON, a chplry. and tnshp. in the par. of Ellerburn, W. div. of Pickering lythe wap., North Riding co. York, 4½ miles S.E. of Pickering. The village is situated on the old road from Pickering to Scarborough. The land is fertile, on a subsoil of limestone. There are a chapel-of-ease to Farmanby and a chapel for Wesleyans. There are National and Sunday schools. The Rev. J. R. Hill, M.A., is lord of the manor.

WILTON BEACON, a div. of the wap. of Harthill, East Riding co. York, contains the pars. of Allerthorpe, Barmby-on-the-Moor, Bishop-Wilton, Burnby, Fangfoss, Full Sutton, Great Givendale, Huggate, Kilnwick Percy, Millington, Pocklington, Sutton-on-Derwent, Wilberfoss, and parts of Catton, Nun-Burnholme, and Thornton, comprising 46,600 acres.

WILTSHIRE, a south-western inland co. of England, bounded on the N. and N.W. by Gloucestershire, on the N.E. by Berkshire, on the E. and S.E. by Hampshire, on the S. by Dorsetshire, and on the W. and S.W. by Somersetshire. It lies between 50° 55′ and 51° 43′ N. lat. and 1° 30′ and 2° 22′ W. long. Its shape is nearly quadrangular, rounded at the northern extremity; its extreme length from N. to S. being 54 miles, and its greatest breadth 37 miles. Its area is about 1,350 square miles, or 865,092 acres. The original populations appear, from the names of the rivers and mountains, to have been Iberians, but they were supplanted at an early period by the Celtic Britons or Welsh, and these in their turn by the Teutonic tribes of the Belgæ and Attrebatii, who occupied it at the time of the first Roman invasion. In the Roman division it was included in the province of Britannia Prima, and under Vespasian was brought into entire subjection, when the stations of Sorbiodunum, Old Sarum, Verlucio, near Heddington, and Cunetio, a little to the E. of Marlborough, were founded, and several military roads constructed, the lines of which may yet be traced in several places. The principal Roman road that traversed the county was a continuation of the Julia Strata, which, entering from Bath, proceeded north-eastward, by Medley and Spy Park, to the station of Verlucio, and thence by Colston, and across the river Kennet, to that of Cunetio, beyond which it stretched across the eastern confines of the county. The Fosse Way branched from the Julia Strata at Bath-Ford, and passed by Banner Down, Easton-Grey, and Malmesbury to Cirencester, in Gloucestershire; another great road entered from Cirencester, and passed south-eastward, by Cricklade, to Wanborough; and the Ridgeway is clearly visible on the chalk ridge extending north-eastward from Avebury into Berkshire. In the beginning of the 6th century the county was replanted by the West Saxons under Cerdic, who defeated the Britons in numerous engagements, but did not succeed in entirely expelling them from the southern districts till about 577, when the county was finally incorporated into the kingdom of Wessex, and received the name of Wiltscire, probably from Wilton, the town on the river Willey, or, perhaps, from the Wilts, a North-German tribe, who are said to have settled here. In the 9th century it was much devastated by the Danes, under Guthrum, who defeated Alfred the Great at Wilton in 871, and burnt Chippenham in 878, but were afterwards overthrown at Eddington. In 995 the Danes, under Sueno, overran all North Wilts, and continued their devastations till 1016. At the Norman Conquest it came to William D'Ewe, Edward de Saresbury, Ralph de Mortimer, Milo Crispin, and others. In the civil war a battle was fought in 1643 on Roundway Down, and the castles and towns of Salisbury, Marlborough, Devizes, Malmesbury, Ludgershall, Warminster, and Wardour were besieged.—The population at the commencement of the present century was 183,820, which in 1851 had increased to 254,221, but in 1861 partially declined to 249,311, of whom 122,592 were males, and 126,719 females, inhabiting 63,126 houses.—The geological strata of the county are principally cretaceous, belonging to the great central chalk district of England, but are traversed nearly through the middle of the county by a narrow belt of greensand, composing the vale of Pewsey, and which separates the chalk of the Marlborough downs and Salisbury Plain on the S. and E. from the oolitic formations which underlie the chalk, except where laid bare in the N. and W., appearing in narrow strips of oolitic freestone, coral rag, Oxford clay, forest marble, and other strata belonging to the upper, middle, and lower oolite, but these occupy only a small proportion of the surface. In the S.E. corner of the county is a deposit of London, or plastic, clay, belonging to the Hampshire formation. The chalk rises into lofty downs in parts; at Westbury Down 775 feet above the sea, Alfred's Beacon 800 feet, Beacon Hill, near Amesbury, 600 feet, and Walbury Beacon 1,011 feet, being the highest chalk in England. There are quarries of good building stone, usually called Bath stone, containing fossils at Box, Swindon, Tisbury, and other places; also limestone at Silbury Hill, sandstone and freestone in the N., chalk and flint in the downs.—There are mineral springs in the Oxford clay, as at Heywood, Holt, and Middle Hill Spa, a chalybeate spring at Chippenham, and a saline and chalybeate spring near Melksham. The drainage belongs to three distinct basins—the Thames, which rises on the Gloucestershire border, drains the north-eastern part of the county, receiving the waters of the Churn, or true Thames; the Key, or Kay; and the Cole; and beyond the limits of the county those of the Kennet, which rises near Wroughton and flows 20 miles through Wiltshire to the Thames at Reading, in Berkshire, receiving the Ogbourn, Aldbourn, and Hungerford brook in its course. The Bristol, or Upper Avon, which belongs to the basin of the Severn, drains the north-western part of the county, receiving the streams of the Tetbury brook, Marden, Devizes river, Mere, and Frome. The Lower, or Salisbury Avon, is a distinct basin, discharging its waters into the English Channel; this river drains the southern part of the county, being formed by five head streams—the Ebele, Nadder, Wily, Avon, and Bourne; its whole length in Wiltshire is 41 miles. None of the Wiltshire rivers are of much service for navigation, but they turn numerous mills, and feed the three important lines of canal which traverse the northern division of the county—the Thames and Severn, the Kennet and Avon, and Wilts and Berks canals. The only lake of any size is Bradon Pond.—The county is separated into two divisions, N. and S., by the vale of Pewsey, and an irregular line marked throughout by downs. The northern part consists principally of a fertile level tract, except towards the northern boundary, where the land begins to rise in the direction of the Cotswold hills, and towards the centre, where it is broken by a ridge of downs. The southern portion is more varied, being broken by downs, some of which are of considerable altitude, and intersected by some fertile and well-watered valleys, especially along the rivers Avon, Willey, and Nadder. In this division is the platform range of downs, known as Salisbury Plain, for the most part unenclosed and bleak, but well adapted for sheep-walks. The number of sheep kept in this part of the county averages between six and seven hundred thousand, yielding about 8,500 packs of wool. Around Orchester are extensive water meadows, and near the Dorchester border are dairy farms, where much butter is made. This county is chiefly celebrated for its bacon and cheese, the latter being usually sold as single and double Gloucester, though made in Wilts.—The manufactures of Wilts are of considerable extent and importance, especially those of woollen goods and broadcloth, which have long been established in the county. Bradford is the seat of the cloth trade, though there are several mills at Westbury, Chippenham, Trowbridge, and Melksham, at which last there are also looms for hair-cloth and sacking, and at Chippenham and Devizes silk-throwing mills; at Salisbury are factories producing excellent cutlery and hardware goods; at Malmesbury lace is made; at Swindon gloves and railway carriages; and in the vicinity of Wilton carpets. In all the large towns malting and brewing are extensively carried on, especially of strong ale for the London market, where it is sold under the names of Wiltshire and Kennet ale.—Communication is maintained with all parts of the kingdom by means of the canals above mentioned, and the railway system of the Great Western, the main line of which enters the county from London a little S. of Highworth, and passes by Swindon, Wootton Bassett, Chippenham, Corsham, and Box to Bath, a distance of 62 miles, and so to Bristol and Exeter. From the main line several branches diverge: one from Swindon runs by Purton and Cirencester to Cheltenham, Gloucester, and Birmingham, thus communicating with the N. and E. parts of the kingdom; another, called the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, goes by Melksham, Bradford, and Trowbridge to Westbury, Warminster, and Frome; and a third branch, from Warminster to Salisbury; a short line also goes from Reading to Hungerford. About 7 miles of the London and South-Western railway enters the county from London by Dean to Salisbury, where branch lines from Bishopstoke and Basingstoke join. There is a new line from Salisbury to Yeovil, which is to be continued to Exeter. The main lines of road radiating from Devizes are that by Avebury and Silbury Hill to Swindon and Highworth, with a fork to Marlborough and Hungerford; that by Calne and Bowood to Cirencester, with forks to Walmesbury and Cricklade; that by Spy Park to Chippenham and Corsham; that by Melksham and Bradford to Bath and Bristol, with a fork to Trowbridge; that by Earlstoke and Westbury to Warminster or Frome; that by Market Lavington, over Salisbury Plain, to Heytesbury and Shaftesbury, with a fork to Wilton, Salisbury, and Southampton; that by Rushall and Ludgershall to Andover, or by Amesbury to Stonehenge, Salisbury, and Winchester.—The county forms two divisions, South and North: of the former, the cathedral city of Salisbury is the capital, where the winter assizes and the parliamentary elections for the South Division are held; and of the latter Devizes, where the summer assizes and the elections for the North Division are held; these towns are also parliamentary boroughs, each returning two members, as do likewise Chippenham, Cricklade, and Marlborough; while Calne, Malmesbury, Westbury, and Wilton each return one member to parliament; the whole of the above-named towns, except Wilton, are market towns, and most of them have public buildings and churches; the other market towns, not being boroughs, are Amesbury, Great Bradford, Hindon, Market Lavington, Melksham, Mere, Swindon, Trowbridge, Warminster, and Wootton-Bassett. The Epiphany and Easter sessions are held at Salisbury, the Midsummer sessions at Warminster, and the Michaelmas at Devizes. The county is included in the Western Circuit, and in the South-Western Military District. Its government is entrusted to a lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum, a vice-lieutenant, sheriff, and about 55 deputy-lieutenants, assisted by 250 magistrates. For ecclesiastical purposes it is included in the dioceses of Salisbury and Gloucester and Bristol, both in the province of Canterbury. By far the larger part belongs to that of Salisbury, forming the archdeaconries of Salisbury and Wilts; the former comprises the deaneries of Amesbury, Chalk, Salisbury, Wilton, and Wily; and the latter those of Avebury, Marlborough, and Potterne, and until recently Cricklade and Malmesbury, but these two last were taken away by the Act 6 and 7 William IV., cap. 77, by which they were annexed to the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol. It is divided into 28 hundreds, 17 Poor-law Unions, and 12 new County Court districts, comprising 336 parishes, besides 20 ecclesiastical districts.—This county is distinguished for its numerous remains of antiquity; of these the most conspicuous are Stonehenge, 2 miles westward of Amesbury; Avebury, 5 miles W. of Marlborough; the vast earthwork of the Wansdyke, conjectured to have been the northern boundary of the Belgæ, stretching across the county for nearly 20 miles from Bath to Marlborough; the Ridgeway, another earthwork, or perhaps a Roman road, extending along the high chalk ridge north-eastward from Avebury into the adjoining county of Berks; Grimsdyke and Bokerley dyke, about 12 miles in length, lying to the S. of Salisbury; Old Ditch, running from Knooke to Durnford; the Julia Strata, Fosse Way, and other Roman roads; numerous ancient encampments, the largest and most noted of which are the fortifications of Old Sarum, including an area of nearly 30 acres; Chidbury Camp, to the N.W. of Tidworth, covering 17 acres; Winklebury, or Vespasian's Camp, enclosing 39 acres; numerous sites of British villages and consecrated places, chiefly in the neighbourhood of Salisbury Plain and the Marlborough downs; remains of the abbeys of Kingswood, Laycock, and Malmesbury, &c.

WIMBISH, a par in the hund. of Uttlesford, co. Essex, 4½ miles S.E. of Saffron-Walden, and 46 from London. The village is situated on the river Pant, and was a place of some note in the time of Edward the Confessor. The par., about 16 miles in circumference, includes the hmlt. of Thunderly, which was annexed to it in 1425, having previously been a separate parish. The soil is principally clay, alternated with gravel. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. with the cur. of Thunderly annexed, £300. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was injured by lightning in 1756, and then partly rebuilt. There are parochial and Sunday schools.

WIMBLEDON, a par. and suburb of the metropolis, in the W. div. of Brixton hund., co. Surrey, 3 miles S.W. of Wandsworth, 4 N.E. of Kingston, and 7½ from London by the London and South-Western railway, which intersects the parish, or 16½ by the Wimbledon branch of the London, Brighton, and South Coast railway, both of which have stations here; there is also a branch line to Epsom and Leatherhead. It is situated on the Wandle, a small brook which here joins the Thames, and includes the Common, a level tract of uninclosed ground, surrounded by seats of the nobility and gentry, and which is at present used for the annual contests of the Rifle Association. At the S.W. corner of the common is a circular encampment of 7 acres, called Cæsar's Camp, surrounded by a single ditch, which is still very deep and perfect. It is said to mark the site of an encampment of the Romans under Julius Cæsar in 54 B.C., and to be the spot where Ethelbert, King of Kent, was defeated in 568 by Ceaulin, King of Wessex. The village, which is mentioned in Domesday survey as Wibbandun or Wymbandune, lies to the N.E. of the common, and consists chiefly of one street of good houses, with numerous seats and villas, including Wimbledon Park, belonging to Earl Spencer, and Cottenham Park, formerly a seat of the Duke of Wellington, but now cut up into villa residences. The English Copper Company erected mills here, and there are calico print works. It is said that Queen Catherine Parr, after the death of Henry VIII., occupied a house in the village, now a school; and Lord Burghley also resided here, and planted the avenue of elms on the common, near which is the seat where Wilberforce was visited by Pitt, and the house in which Horne Tooke died in 1812. The custom of Borough English prevails in the manor, of which Earl Spencer is the present lord. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of London, val. £500, from voluntary contributions, and in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Worcester, who are impropriators. The church of St. Mary is a Gothic structure, rebuilt in 1843. There are besides two chapels-of-ease, viz., Christ Church, erected in 1859, and the Holy Trinity, in 1862. The parochial register commences in 1513. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists have chapels. There are National, industrial, and infant schools, also 6 almshouses, built in 1839 by subscription, and endowed with the interest of £1,000, the profits of a fancy fair held in the grounds of Wimbledon House. On digging in the grounds of Belvidere House in 1838, two figures of white marble, life size, were discovered several feet below the surface, one representing Summer and the other Winter.

WIMBLINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Doddington, co. Cambridge, 3½ miles S. of March. It is a station on the Cambridge, March, and Wisbeach branch of the Great Eastern railway.

WIMBOLDSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Middlewich and hund. of Northwich, co. Chester, 2 miles S.W. of Middlewich. It is situated near the river Weaver, on the line of the London and North-Western railway.

WIMBOLDS TRAFFORD, a tnshp. in the par. of Thornton-le-Moors, co. Chester, 4 miles N.E. of Chester.

WIMBORNE, a hund. in the Shaston div. of co. Dorset, contains the pars. of Wimborne St. Giles and West Woodyates, comprising 3,090 acres.

WIMBORNE, a par. in the hund. of Wimborne and Cranborne, co. Dorset, 2 miles S.W. of Cranborne, and 5 S. of Woodyates. It comprises the tythgs. of Wimborne All Saints and All Hallows. The village is situated on the river Allen, and chiefly belongs to the Earl of Shaftesbury, whose seat, St. Giles' Park, is comprised within this parish. In the park is a grotto made of shells and mineral ores. The manor anciently belonged to the Plessys, from whom it came to the Malmairs, Hamelyns, and Ashley-Coopers, and now belongs to the Earl of Shaftesbury, who takes hence the title of baron. The soil is light, resting upon a substratum of chalk. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £620. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1732, and restored by the Earl of Shaftesbury in 1852. The register dates from 1652. There are National schools for both sexes, and almshouses for widows and aged persons founded by Sir A. Ashley, but the endowment belonging to which has been unfortunately lost.

WIMBORNE MINSTER, a par. and market town in the hund. of Badbury, co. Dorset, 10 miles S.E. of Blandford, 23 N.E. of Dorchester, 6 from Poole, and 100 from London. It has stations on the London and South-Western and Somerset and Dorset railways. It is situated in a valley, which was forest at the time of the Domesday survey, near the site of the Roman station Vindogladia, and takes its name from the Wim or Allen burn which here joins the river Stour. The par. comprises, besides the ancient town of Wimbourne, the parochial district of Holt, the tythg. of Leigh, and the manor of Kingston Lacy, with the hmlts. of Abbott-street, Badbury, where was one of the first Roman encampments in England, Barford, Barnsley, Congreve, Hound Hill, Pamphill, and Stone. It is a polling-place for the county elections, a petty-sessions town, and nominal borough, governed by a constable and two bailiffs, with tithingmen, who are annually appointed at the manorial court held at Michaelmas. The population of the parish in 1861 was 4,807, but of the town, 2,271. There are a savings-bank, two commercial branch banks, gas-works, union poorhouse, three bridges over the Allen, two over the Stour, which is not navigable, and a railway viaduct near Canford bridge. The surrounding country is hilly, but fertile, abounding in rich meadows and pasture. The principal seats are Wimborne St. Giles, of the Earl of Shaftesbury; Heron Court, of the Earl of Malmesbury; Kingston Lacy Hall, of E. G. Banks, Esq., where stands the obelisk brought from Philoe by Bankes the traveller; Dean's Court; Canford House, of Sir Ivor B. Guest, Bart., once occupied by Queen Adelaide in 1844, and where is John of Gaunt's kitchen; Gaunt's House, of Sir R. Glynn, Bart., surrounded by an old moat; Critchell House, High Hall, Udden's House, and Stone House. The great attraction of the neighbourhood is Shag's Heath, between the roads to Ringwood and Fordingbridge, where stands an aspen-tree inscribed with many names, marking the spot on which the Duke of Monmouth was captured after his flight from the battle of Sedgmoor. The living is a peculiar in the gift of the Corporation of the Governors of Queen Elizabeth's Grammar School, who allow £2,500 out of the tithes for the support of three clergymen or prebends, at £250 each, 16 choristers, and an organist. The church, which is dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is 180 feet long, in the shape of a cross, with two square towers, one rising from the centre, and the other at the W. end. The central tower originally had a lofty spire, which fell down in 1600, and beneath the church is a vaulted crypt and chapel. It originally belonged to the nunnery founded by Cuthburga, daughter of Kenred, King of Wessex, in 713, and previous to the Reformation had ten altars, made of costly materials, and many relics. It has recently been restored with new stained windows by Williment. In the interior are 16 canopied stalls, a piscina, and numerous old monuments, particularly that of King Ethelred, brother of Alfred the Great, with a brass of the 15th century, a brass plate to Dean John de Berwick, dated 1312, effigies of the Somersets, parents of the Lady Margaret, mother of Henry VII., bearing date 1444, of Sir E. Uvedale and another knight, and a monument to Ettricke the antiquary, with lines by Prior. There is also the district church of Holt, which has been erected into a separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes. The Baptists, Wesleyans, and Independents have chapels. The free grammar school was originally founded by Margaret, Countess of Richmond, in 1497, but was re-established by Queen Elizabeth in 1562, and rebuilt after the Elizabethan style in 1851. The school is open to boys from all parts of England, and is governed, under an order of the Court of Chancery made in 1848, by a head-master and three ushers, who receive boarders to prepare for the universities. There are also National schools, built in 1843, and a school endowed by Gillingham. The charities produce about £1,500 per annum, of which a moiety belongs to the church and schools, and about £200 to St. Margaret's and Courtnay's hospitals or almshouses. Wimborne is the head of a Poor-law Union, embracing 24 parishes, and of new county court and superintendent registry districts. Market day is on Friday. Fairs are held on the Friday and Saturday before Good Friday, and on the 14th September for horses, cattle, and cheese, and a large monthly sale of horses and cattle by public auction.

WIMBOTSHAM, a par. in the hund. of Clackclose, co. Norfolk, 1 mile N.E. of Downham-Market, and 10 S. of Lynn. The village is situated on the road to Lynn, near the river Ouse, which bounds the parish on one side. The land is chiefly arable, with some meadow, pasture, and woodland. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, consolidated with the vic. of Stow Bardolph. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was thoroughly restored in 1854, when the apse was entirely rebuilt at the cost of the rector. It has two Norman doorways, and an old piscina discovered in 1840. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities consist of a share with Downham.

WIMESWOULD, a par. in the hund. of East Goscote, co. Leicester, 5 miles N.E. of Loughborough. The village is situated in a valley on the northern borders of the county. It had a charter for a market and fair granted by Edward III., but both have long since been discontinued. Hose and lace are made. The surface is undulating and the soil clayey, with gravel in parts. There are quarries of blue lias and gravel. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £200, in the patron. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was restored in 1850 at a cost of £3,000. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Baptists have chapels. There are four day schools.

WIMPOLE, a par. in the hund. of Wetherley, co. Cambridge, 5½ miles S.E. of Caxton. Wimpole Hall, the family seat of the Hardwickes, contains a collection of historical paintings and portraits by the first masters, and in the chapel is a carved ivory crucifixion and "Temple of the Sibyls" in mosaic. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £400. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was rebuilt by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in 1749. It contains various effigies and monuments to the Hardwicke and Chicheley families, some rich stained glass, two brasses, the earliest bearing date 1501, and an hexagonal font. The charities produce about £21 per annum. There is a school supported by the Earl of Hardwicke, who is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WIMPSTONE, a hmlt. in the par. of Whitchurch, co. Warwick, 4 miles S.E. of Stratford on Avon, on the river Stour.

WINCANTON, a par., market town, and nominal borough in the hund. of Norton-Ferris, co. Somerset, 34 miles E. of Taunton, and 108 S.W. of London. It has a station on the Dorset Central railway, and is only 5 miles from the Bruton station on the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, and 5 from the Temple Combe station of the London and South-Western railway. This place was called by the Saxons Wyndcaleton, from its situation amongst the windings of the river Cale, by which the parish is bounded on the W. During the parliamentary war in the reign of Charles I., some of the earliest skirmishes are said to have taken place in the immediate vicinity of the town, and Burnet in his "History of his Own Times" states that the first blood shed in the revolution of 1688 by the Prince of Orange was spilt here, though others refer this to Cirencester. The town, which stands on the western slope of a hill, rising gently from the river Cale, was destroyed by fire in 1747. It is regularly laid out in four main streets, containing many well-built houses, and is a polling place for the eastern division of the county. Near the centre of the town, on the western side of the market-place, stands the townhall, in which petty sessions and the county court are held monthly. There are, besides, a police station recently erected, a branch of Stuckey's bank, a branch of the Wilts and Dorset bank, the East Somerset savings-bank, reading-rooms, a brewery, stone bridge, and union workhouse. The streets are paved and lighted with gas, and the houses supplied with water by conduits. The population of the parish in 1861 was 2,450. The manufacture of linen and bed-ticking, formerly carried on to a large extent, is now obsolete, but a considerable business is done in the corn and cheese trade. About a mile to the S.E. of the town are mineral springs, resembling in their properties the waters of Cheltenham. Wincanton, though called a borough, has no chartered corporation, but is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. It is divided into the borough and the tything; two constables for the former being annually appointed at the manorial court, and a tything-man for the latter at the court leet for the hundred, which is also held annually under G. D. Wingfield Digby, Esq., of Sherborne Castle, who is lord of the manor. The estate of Stavordale, in this parish, where are the remains of an ancient priory, confers the inferior title of Viscount Stavordale on the Earl of Ilchester. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £125. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The Independents and Baptists have chapels. There are National, Sunday, and denominational schools. The charities produce about £6 per annum. Many Roman coins have been found here, and in a wood near the ruins of Stavordale Priory are the remains of a British fort called Kennewilkins Castle. Market day is on Wednesday, for corn, cattle, and cheese. Fairs are held on Easter-Tuesday and 29th September.

WINCEBY, a par. in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 2½ miles N.W. of Bolingbroke, and 4 S.E. of Horncastle, on the Wolds. A battle was fought here during the parliamentary war, in which the king's troops were defeated. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £300, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a village school.

WINCH, or EAST WINCH, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge-Lynn, co. Norfolk, 5 S.E. of Lynn, on the road from Lynn to Norwich. The land is chiefly arable. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £190. The church is dedicated to All Saints, and on the N. side is the mortuary chapel of the Vere and Howard families, whose arms are emblazoned in the E. window of the chancel. The charities produce about £50 per annum, the rent of town lands bequeathed for the repair of the church and the relief of the poor.

WINCH, or WEST WINCH, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge-Lynn, co. Norfolk, 3 miles S.E. of Lynn. It is bounded on the W. by the navigable river Nar, and adjoins East Winch. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £360, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a National school.

WINCHAM, a tnshp. in the par. of Great Budworth, co. Cheshire, 2 miles N.E. of Northwich.

WINCHBURGH, a vil. in the par. of Kirkliston, co. Linlithgow, Scotland, 2 miles N. of Broxburn, and 4 S.W. of Queensferry. It has stations on the Edinburgh and Glasgow and Scottish Central railways. It is situated on the Union canal, and on the road from Edinburgh to Falkirk. Here Edward II. halted after the defeat of Bannockburn.

WINCHCOMBE, a par., market town, and borough by prescription, locally situated in the lower div. of Kiftsgate hund., co. Gloucester, 7 miles from Cheltenham, 14 N.E. of Gloucester, and 94 from London. It is situated in a valley at the northern base of the Cotswold hills, and on the banks of the small river Isborne, which joins the Avon at Evesham. In the Saxon times it had a royal palace, and a mitred Benedictine abbey, founded by Kenulph, king of Mercia in 798, who was buried here. The abbey having been destroyed by the Danes, was rebuilt in 985 by Bishop Oswald, but was partially spoiled by William the Conqueror. At the Dissolution it was valued at £769 11*s.* 9*d.*, and the site granted by Edward VI. to Sir Thomas Seymour. In the Domesday survey it is mentioned as Winchelcombe, at which time the town was incorporated by a charter of Edward the Confessor, and had 2 bailiffs, who were appointed annually by the lord of the manor, and 12 burgesses. The bailiffs continue to be chosen, but have long ceased to exercise jurisdiction. The courts leet and baron are held at Easter by John Dent, Esq., who is lord of the manors of Winchcombe and Sudeley. Petty sessions are held on the last Friday, and the county court on the first Monday in each month. The Poor-law Union of Winchcombe comprises 29 parishes, and the guardians meet weekly on Saturday. The town consists mainly of three streets running from E. to W., and crossed by a few smaller streets. The houses are substantial, being built of stone, but generally old-fashioned. The principal buildings are the townhall, which has just been rebuilt, the union poorhouse, savings-bank, public reading-rooms, a mechanics' institute, agricultural institution, and a branch of the Gloucestershire Banking Company. Great improvements have recently been effected by the lighting and new sewering of the town. There are a silk factory, paper mills, flour mills, a tan-yard and skin-yard. Prior to the statute of Charles I., tobacco was largely cultivated in this district. The par. includes, besides the town, the chplries. of Greet and Gretton, and the hmlts. of Abbey Demesnes, Coates, Cockbury, Corndean, Langley, Naunton-with-Frampton, Postlip, and Sudeley-Tenements. There are several mineral springs. The principal seats are Toddington Abbey, the modern mansion of Lord Sudeley, about 3 miles from the town, and Sudeley Castle, erected by Ralph le Boteler, treasurer and lord high admiral in the reign of Henry VI.; it was reduced to a mere wreck by the parliamentarians during the civil war, but the first quadrangle has been recently restored by William and John Dent, Esqs. Winchcombe gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of Gloucester. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. with the cur. of Gretton annexed, £150. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There are two grammar schools, one founded by Henry VIII., called the King's School, for 10 boys, now united with the Townshend Charity school, founded in 1683, and the other founded by the Lady Frances Chandos, of Sudeley Castle, in the reign of James I., for 14 boys, natives of the town—which number has recently been increased by the trustees to 24 boys. There are besides National and infant schools, the silk factory school, and Sunday-schools in connection with the Church, Wesleyan and Baptist chapels. The local charities, including the school endowments, produce about £130 per annum. In the vicinity are the ruins of the Cistercian mitred abbey of Hailes, founded by Richard Plantagenet, Earl of Cornwall and King of the Romans in the reign of John. Market day is on Saturday. Fairs are held on the 6th May for cattle, last Saturday in March and 28th July for cattle, and two statute fairs at Michaelmas.

WINCHELSEA, a par., seaport, corporate town, and one of the cinque ports, locally in the hund. of Guestling, rape of Hastings, co. Sussex, but having separate jurisdiction, 3 miles S.W. of Rye, within which parliamentary borough it is included, and 8 N.E. of Hastings, of which cinque port it is a member. It is a station on the London and South-Eastern railway. This place, which is now only a considerable village, was formerly a market town and parliamentary borough, originally founded by Wincheling, son of Cissa, the first king of the South Saxons, from whom it derives its name. It is situated at the mouth of the river Rother, on the road from Rye to Hastings, and near the military canal. In the Saxon times it was one of the most flourishing towns on the S. coast, and was the port at which William the Conqueror landed in 1067, and Henry II. in 1188. It was made a cinque port before the reign of John, and in that of Henry III. it was made a member of the port of Hastings, and contributed 10 ships, each containing 21 men and a boy. In 1250 more than 300 houses were destroyed by an inundation, and in 1287, on the eve of St. Agatha, the original town was entirely overwhelmed by the sea, which on that occasion also drowned all the lands, climesden and the voches of Hithe. After this event the inhabitants resolved to build a new town upon the top of a rising ground, or isthmus, called Sham, and then a rabbit warren, in the par. of Schlesham, but now about a mile and a half from the sea; three of the gates are now standing, Newgate, Strandgate, and Landgate. The site of the present town was given by Edward I., who also contributed largely to the relief of the inhabitants, though some years previously, viz., in 1266, whilst prince, he had stormed the town for piracy. The new town soon rose into importance, but was plundered by the French in 1358 and 1377, and by the Spaniards in 1380; it, however, continued to flourish till the time of Queen Elizabeth, who visited it and termed it Little London, but shortly after it decayed rapidly, owing to the retiring of the sea, which caused the harbour to become choked. It at present consists of several streets running at right angles to one another, said to have been built after the plan of the town which was swept away by the sea, and has an ancient courthouse, with gaol beneath it. The town, which contains many good houses is about two miles in circumference, and extends into the adjoining parishes of Icklesham, Pett, and Broomhill. The parish, in 1861, had a population of 719. From the 42nd year of the reign of Edward III. to the passing of the Reform Act of 1832, it returned two members to parliament, but was then annexed to the borough of Rye. Immediately before the disfranchisement of the borough the number of electors, consisting of the mayor, jurates, and freemen, amounted to only 9. The charter of incorporation is of great antiquity. Under it the town is governed by a mayor and 12 jurates, who are justices of peace holding courts of general session and gaol delivery, and have jurisdiction over capital offences within the ancient town and liberties. In the marshes, about 2 miles N.E. of the town, stand the ruins of Winchelsea or Cambro Castle, built by Henry VIII. out of the materials of a more ancient fort, and within the ancient walls are parts of the conventual church and choir of the Grey Friars, found by William de Buckingham with an arch 26 feet wide and some windows. There were also a convent of Dominicans and a perceptory of St. Anthony, but of these no traces exist. Winchelsea gives the title of Earl to the family of Finch of Eastwell. Robert de Winchelsea, who died in 1313, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born here. The principal places are Mariteau House and the new Rectory. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £280. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, is now mostly in ruins, overgrown with ivy on the S. and W. sides, the chancel alone being now used for divine worship. In the interior are an ancient brass bearing date 1440, three effigies of Knights Templars or Crusaders, and two of priests. The parochial register dates from 1538. The market, which was held on Saturday, has long been obsolete. A fair is held on 14th May.

WINCHENDON, NETHER, a par. in the hund. of Ashendon, co. Bucks, 6 miles N.E. of Thame, its post town, and 6½ S.W. of Aylesbury. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Oxford. A Sunday-school is held at the church. Winchendon Priory, the principal residence, was originally an ecclesiastical structure, and has belonged to the Bernard family a considerable period. Thomas Syringham Bernard, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WINCHENDON, UPPER, a par. in the hund. of Aylesbury, co. Bucks, 2 miles N.E. of Nether Winchendon, and 6. N.W. of Aylesbury. The Duke of Marlborough has a lodge in the village. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £60. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, contains tombs of the Whartons, and two brasses, the earliest bearing date 1515.

WINCHESTER, a div. of co. Hants, contains the hunds. of Bountisborough, Upper and Lower Buddlesgate, Upper and Lower Fawley, Upper and Lower Mitcheldever, Mainsborough, and East and West Soke liberty; comprising 100,110 acres, exclusive of the city of Winchester.

WINCHESTER, an ancient city and market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, having separate jurisdiction, but locally situated in the hund. of Buddlesgate, co. Hants, of which it is the county town, 12 miles N.E. of Southampton, and 62 S.W. of London by road, or 66½ by the London and South-Western railway, on which it is a station. Before the Roman time it was successively occupied by the Iberians, Britons, and Belgæ. On the conquest of the island by the Romans, the city was taken by Ostorius Scapula, and called Venta Belgarum. Carausius and Alectus, who assumed the imperial purple in Britain, are asserted to have fixed their residence in this city, and here their coins have been discovered in greater numbers than in any other part of the island. After the departure of the Romans it again became the seat of government till the year 516, when the West Saxons made themselves masters of the city, which then became the capital of Wessex, and received the name of Wintan-ceaster. During Cerdic's reign the church and monastery, which had been founded here shortly after the establishment of Christianity in the island, were converted into a pagan temple. In the following century, St. Birnus, whom Pope Honorius had sent into Britain, succeeded, through the influence of Oswald, King of Northumbria, in converting the West Saxons to Christianity, and their king, Cenwahl, in 648 erected a church, which he dedicated to SS. Birinus, Peter, and Paul, near the site of the primitive British church, and which, in 660, King Kenewalch made it the head of a see. It continued to be the capital of Wessex till 827, when Egbert was here crowned king of all Angle-land, or England. Although several times assaulted by the Danes, the city continued to flourish as the capital of England, and was made a guild under royal protection in the 9th century, thus enjoying municipal liberties at least one hundred years earlier than any other town in England. Athelstan established here his treasury and mint, and deposited the standard Winchester bushel, which is still preserved, together with the standard yard of Henry I. In 1013 it was devastated by Sweyn, the Dane, in retaliation for the "Hocktide massacre" of his countrymen in 1002, and remained the seat of the Danish government till the death of that monarch, when Edmund Ironside recovered the western part of the island, with Winchester for his capital, and Cnut reigned in London; but on the death of the former in 1016, Cnut became sole king. In 1042 Edward the Confessor was crowned here, and in 1044 his mother, Queen Emma, is said to have passed through the ordeal of red-hot ploughshares, in the cathedral, unscathed. After the Norman Conquest, Winchester continued for above a century to divide with London the honours of the capital, and William I. built a strong castle at the S.W. extremity of the city. In 1079, Walkelyn, a relative of the Conqueror, having been made bishop of this see, commenced the rebuilding of the cathedral, retaining the Saxon crypt, with such portions of the walls and pillars of the previous edifice erected by St. Ethelwald in the 10th century, as remained uninjured by the Danes. Having completed the present tower, and repaired the nave and transepts, Walkelyn dedicated the church to SS. Peter, Paul, and Swithin; the reliques of which last saint he disinterred from his tomb in the churchyard, and placed with the bones of Saxon kings in the mortuary chests, which now surmount the choir screen. On the death of Walkelyn, in 1098, William Rufus, who had been crowned here, seized upon the bishopric and held it till the year 1100, when, having been shot in the New Forest, his corpse was brought here in a charcoal burner's cart and buried in the centre of the choir. On the death of Rufus, his younger brother Henry I. seized upon the Treasury, then kept at Winchester, and caused himself to be crowned, in disparagement of his elder brother Robert, and the better to secure his title, the same year married in the cathedral the Princess Matilda, daughter of Malcolm III., king of Scotland. In the same year a destructive fire broke out, which consumed the royal palace, the mints, the guildhall, a considerable portion of the city, and many of the public records. Under the protection of Henry I. it attained its highest pitch of prosperity. At this time it contained two royal palaces or castles, an episcopal palace, a cathedral, three monasteries of royal foundation, and 90 churches—most of which, however, were of wood; its buildings, exceeding their present limits, extended as far as Worthy on the N., St. Cross on the S., Wyke on the W., and St. Magdalen's Hill on the E. During the civil war between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, a fierce struggle was carried on for several weeks in the streets of Winchester, in which the royal palace, the abbey of St. Mary, Hyde Abbey, and about 40 churches were burnt or laid in ruins. From this period it declined, although frequently the temporary residence of the sovereign, and on various occasions the seat of the parliaments—one of which, in the reign of Edward I., passed the famous "statutes of Winchester," and another, in that of Edward II., condemned the Earl of Kent. It experienced a partial gleam of prosperity in the reign of Edward III., who made it the staple for wool, and for about a century it was an important seat of the woollen manufacture. In the reign of Henry VI. a petition was presented to the king, which stated that 997 houses were uninhabited and 17 churches shut up. Henry VIII. entertained here the Emperor Charles V., but brought great desolation on the town by the suppression of its numerous religious establishments. In the civil war of Charles I. the city was taken and retaken several times—first, by Waller, for the parliament, in 1642; second, by Ogle, for the king, in 1643; again the same year by Waller, when the cathedral was much damaged by the Commonwealth soldiers, who destroyed or defaced the stained-glass windows, the monuments, and other relics; and finally by Cromwell in 1645, after the battle of Naseby, when, after a week's siege, he undermined and blew up Winchester castle, and laid Wolvesey castle in ruins, besides many churches and the city walls. St. Mary's College escaped uninjured, it is said, through the advocacy of one of the parliamentary officers, who had been educated in the college. In 1666 the city was so ravaged by the plague that the country people dared not approach the town with provisions, but left them at a spot beyond the Westgate, now marked by an obelisk. The city was a favourite place of Charles II., who frequently visited it, and employed Sir Christopher Wren to design and erect a palace, which he intended for a summer residence, on the site of the ancient castle, but which was shortly after interrupted by the king's death, and not resumed till the reign of Anne, when Prince George of Denmark recommenced the works, but he dying before it was finished, the Government assigned it as a place of confinement for French prisoners in the last century; it has subsequently been converted into barracks for infantry, and a large building, recently erected in the adjoining grounds, as a chapel for the garrison. The older portion of the town is occupied by narrow streets, branching off at right angles from the High-street, a thoroughfare of about three-quarters of a mile in length, running nearly due E. and W. through the centre of the city. The streets are well paved and lighted, and the drainage, formerly defective, is now undergoing a thorough revision. Among the recent improvements are the extensive waterworks and the extramural cemetery of 7 acres, situated to the S.W. of the town. Nearly in the middle of the High-street, on the S. side, is an ancient piazza, called the Pent House, with the butter cross in front, supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry VI. by one of the city guilds, tradition says with the money paid for a dispensation to eat butter in Lent—whence the name—and restored in 1865 by Mr. G. G. Scott, under William Budden, mayor. The cross, which is in the later English style, consists of 3 stories, 43 feet high, on a base of 5 steps, ornamented with pinnacles and niches containing figures of Alfred the Great, St. Lawrence, William of Wickham, and Florence de Lunn. A little higher up the street, on the same side of the way, is the townhall, rebuilt in 1713, with a figure of Queen Anne in front; and at the top of the street is the western gate of the city, containing the muniment room, where the archives of the city and the standard weights and measures are kept. A little to the left of the gateway is the chapel or hall of the royal castle built by William the Conqueror, and now used as the county hall. This last is 110 feet long by 45 wide, the roof being supported by Gothic arches springing from marble pillars, and at the E. end is suspended the so-called round table of King Arthur. Other public buildings are the county gaol and bridewell, recently erected on West Hill, in place of the old gaol, which stood in Jewry-street, and the bridewell, which stood on the site of Hyde Abbey, N. of the town; the new corn-exchange in Jewry-street, built in 1839, with a Tuscan portico and front of 120 feet; market-house, erected in 1772, and rebuilt in 1857; county hospital, on the summit of a hill to the S.W. of the town, intended to supersede the present edifice, erected in 1736; a museum, assembly rooms, race stand, union workhouse, general post-office, mechanics' institution, subscription library, stone bridge of one arch across the Itchen, a savings-bank, and four commercial banks. In religious, educational, and charitable foundations, Winchester stands unrivalled: the first place being due to the Cathedral, both on account of its high antiquity and the magnificence of its design. Few churches in Europe exhibit finer specimens of Gothic architecture than are displayed by the carved roof of the choir, erected by Bishop Fox, and the delicate lace work of the stone altar screen. The proportions of the edifice are—from the W. entrance to the choir, 356 feet; length of choir, 135 feet; and the lady chapel at the E. end, 54 feet; making a total length of 545 feet. The nave is 87 feet wide, including the aisles, or 186 through the transepts, and 78 feet high. The tower is 48 feet by 50, and only 139 feet high. The cathedral has undergone many restorations and repairs; but that which was completed in 1828 was the most perfect, having occupied 16 years, and cost upwards of £50,000. The most recent restoration is that of the E. window. Among the numerous monuments in the cathedral may be mentioned the tomb of William Rufus, of plain grey stone, without inscription, in the choir; the six mortuary chests, filled by Bishop Fox with the remains of Saxon kings and saints; the chantries or oratories of the bishops Wykeham, Edyngton, Courtney, and Prior Silkstede, with his rebus, a skein of silk and a steed; Fox, containing his effigy and crest; St. Swithin, Gardiner, Cardinal Beaufort, and Waynflete, lately restored; also the sepulchre chapel and the Grecian screen of Inigo Jones, with statues of James I. and Charles I.; also Prior Silkstede's pulpit, Bishop Walkelyn's old square font, sculptured with basso-relievos of St. Nicholas and his chapter, supported on four pillars; Bishop Trelawney's throne, the effigies of De Foix the Crusader, and a bronze of Lord Portland, besides an altar-piece by West, representing "Christ raising Lazarus," and the chair in which Queen Mary sat during her marriage with Philip of Spain. There are, too, the holy hole, where bones were formerly collected; the doomsday vault in the N. aisle, where the Rotulus Wintoniæ was kept before its removal to London, and many frescoes, wall paintings, punning rebuses, and tombs of bishops. Within the cathedral precincts are a passage 90 feet long, formerly connected with Bishop de Lucy's cloisters; the site of the old chapter-house close to the dean's garden; the refectory, an ancient stone structure, 41 feet by 23, with two large kitchens below; the prior's hall, now the deanery, and Bishop Morley's palace, with a chapel of the time of Henry VII. Second only to the cathedral is St. Mary's College, the foundation of William of Wykeham, situated outside the city boundary, on the S.E. It was erected in 1382-93 on the site of the old grammar-school, in which he had been educated, and which is known to have been founded before 1136. It consists of two quadrangles built of hewn stone, and entered through an antique gateway, which leads, by another gateway under a tower, to the inner court. Over the latter gateway are statues of St. Michael and the founder, praying on either side, and the Virgin in the centre. The inner quadrangle is the more elegant, having in the S. side the hall and chapel: the former 63 feet by 33, with a good timber roof; and the latter one of the most beautiful specimens of Gothic architecture extant, covered with a vaulted roof, and enriched with stained windows, the eastern one representing the genealogy of Christ; also antique stalls, six brasses of priests, and an altar reredos lately restored by Mr. Butterfield at the expense of Chief Justice Sir W. Erle. The cloisters adjoining the chapel are of the fifteenth century, and form a square, each side of which is about 132 feet, with several brasses let into the wall; and in the central area is the library, built in 1430, by J. Fromond, as a chantry. The school-room was built by a subscription among the Wykehamists, as the students are styled, in 1687, at a cost of £2,592. The residence of the head-master adjoins the college, and has been recently rebuilt at a cost of £20,000. This college numbers at present about 300 students. It was originally designed by the founder as a preparatory seminary of New College, Oxford, also founded by Wykeham, and consists of a warden, 10 fellows, and 70 foundation scholars, besides other scholars, clerks, choristers, and others. A public examination takes place annually, when the vacant scholarships at New College are filled up by the warden from among the most promising students. Amongst the eminent men educated here have been about 40 prelates, including Ken (whose name may still be seen cut upon the cloister walls), Howley, and Louth, besides Sir T. Browne, Wotton, Otway, Phillips, Young, Somerville, Collins, T. Warton, Hayley, and Sidney Smith. Other ancient foundations are St. John's hospital, part of which is now used as a public banqueting-room and assembly room; Symonds's college, or Christ's hospital, founded in 1607 by Peter Symonds; Morley's hospital, or the Matrons' college, founded in 1672 by Bishop Morley, for the support of 10 clergymen's widows, on the site of St. Grimbald's new mynster, founded by Alfred the Great in 808, and whose inscription was picked up here; the Abbey house, built on the site of St. Mary's abbey, originally founded by Alfred's wife, Alswitha, and rebuilt by Henry II.; and the hospital of St. Cross, which has lately been restored by Mr. Butterfield, about 1 mile S. of the town. The hospital was originally built and endowed by Henry de Blois, the brother of King Stephen, in 1136, but was much enlarged by Cardinal Beaufort, who added the "Almshouses of Noble Poverty." The church and other buildings belonging to the hospital are in Norman architecture, erected chiefly during the prelacy of Cardinal Beaufort. At present this ancient institution consists of a master and 13 brethren of Bishop de Blois' original foundation, with a porter, cook, and 25 out-pensioners; but when its revenues, which are managed under a provisional scheme of the Court of Chancery, will permit, it is in contemplation to revive Cardinal Beaufort's larger design. The churches of Winchester are 12 in number, and are mostly ancient. St. Lawrence is the bishop's or mother church; St. Swithin's was built by King John over the old postern of the king's gate, and is much admired; St. Bartholomew's, once belonging to Hyde Abbey; St. Maurice's, once collegiate; St. Thomas, recently rebuilt; St. John's, part Norman; St. Peter Cheeshill, built in the 11th century; St. John the Baptist's chapel; the old church of St. Cross, mentioned above; the Holy Trinity Church, on the N. walls, recently erected by the Messrs. Govers; and Christ Church, S.W. of the town. The city comprises the eight parishes of St. Bartholomew Hyde, St. Lawrence, St. Peter Cheeshill, St. Swithin, St. John, St. Maurice with St. Mary Kalendar and St. Peter Colebrook annexed, St. Thomas with St. Clement's, besides the extra-parochial districts of the Close, St. Mary's College, and the hospital of St. Cross. The see of Winchester is in the province of Canterbury, and includes the archdeaconries of Surrey and Winchester, with the islands of Wight, Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark. The bishop is sub-dean of the province of Canterbury, and prelate of the Order of the Garter, ranking next after London and Durham. The chapter comprises a dean, 5 canons, 5 minor canons, a chancellor, and 2 archdeacons. The income of the bishop is fixed at £10,500, and his residences are Farnham Castle, in Surrey, Winchester House, and St. James's-square, London. Winchester has a high steward and recorder, and is a borough by prescription. Under the late Municipal Act it is divided into 3 wards, and is governed by a mayor, who is returning officer, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, with the style of "mayor, bailiffs, and commonalty of the city of Winchester." The municipal revenue is about £2,700, its area is 850 acres, and its assessment £41,453. It has returned two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I., and is the polling town for the northern division of the county. The spring and midsummer assizes and quarter sessions for the county are held in the county hall; and the mayor and corporation hold quarterly sessions for the trial of all offences not capital. A county court is held monthly, and the Bishop's court, callen Cheyney court, from the French word chêne, "an oak," under which it was formerly held, has also jurisdiction for debt and damage within the liberties of the see or convent of St. Swithin. It is the head of an excise district, and the seat of a superintendent registry. The Poor-law Union comprises 34 parishes and townships. Since the decay of the woollen trade no manufactures of importance have been introduced, but considerable business is done in the general trade and in agricultural produce, also in brewing, malting, and brick-making. The principal seats in the vicinity are Ampfield, Avington Park, Cranbury, Crawley, Hursley Lodge, Shawford, Twyford House, Worthy Park, and Hong Kong, in the Chinese style of architecture, where R. Andrews, Esq., as mayor of Southampton, received Kossuth, the Hungarian, on his arrival in England in 1854. Winchester gives title of Marquis to the Paulets of Amport. The Kingsworthy hounds hunt in the vicinity. One newspaper, the Hampshire Chronicle, is published in the town. Here is a Roman Catholic church, built in 1792 by Carter, which has several stained windows, and the ancient Norman porch of St. Mary Magdalene's hospital. The Wesleyans, Independents, Baptists, and other dissenting congregations have chapels. The educational establishments include Winchester College, above described, the diocesan training school, several private academies, and numerous National, infant, and Sunday schools in connection with the several places of worship. Races take place annually on the downs, about 3 miles N.W. of the town, on a two-mile course. Market days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on the first Monday in Lent; on the 2nd August, at St. Mary Magdalene's hill; and on the 23rd and 24th October for sheep, horses, &c.

WINCHFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Odiham, co. Hants, 2 miles S.W. of Harford Bridge, and 2 N.E. of Odiham. It is a station on the London and South-Western railway. The village is situated on the Basingstoke canal, which has a wharf here. The surface is flat and the soil a mixture of loam and clay. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a carved pulpit bearing date 1634, and a wall painting of Dives and Lazarus.

WINCHMORE HILL, an ecclesiastical district and vil. in the par. and hund. of Edmonton, co. Middlesex, 1 mile from Southgate, 2 miles from Edmonton, and 8 N. of St. Paul's, London. The population in 1861 was 1,674. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of London, val. £300, in the patron. of the Vicar of Edmonton. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1828 by the parliamentary commissioners. It has an E. window representing in 12 medallions the principal acts in the life of St. Paul. The Calvinistic Methodists, Independents, and Society of Friends have chapels. There are National and infant schools.

WINCLE, a chplry. in the par. of Prestbury, co. Chester, 5 miles S.E. of Macclesfield, on the river Dane.

WINCOBANK, a hmlt. in the par. of Ecclesfield, wap. of Strafforth, West Riding co. York, 4 miles N. of Sheffield.

WINDER, a tnshp. in the par. of Lamplugh, ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 5 miles S.E. of Whitehaven. It is a station on the Whitehaven and Egremont railway.

WINDER, HIGH and LOW, tnshps. in the par. of Barton, co. Westmoreland, 4 miles S.W. of Penrith.

WINDERMERE, a par. in the Kendal ward, co. Westmoreland, 9 miles W. of Kendal, 5 from Ambleside, and 2 N.E. of Bowness. It is approached by the London and North-Western, the Midland, and the Lancashire and Yorkshire railways. This parish derives its name from the lake anciently called Wynandermere and Wonwaldremere, which is 12 miles in length and about 1½ mile in breadth, and is from 5 to 40 fathoms deep. Its surface is 108 fathoms above sea-level, and is adorned with 13 islets, the most picturesque being Belle Isle, in the centre of which formerly stood Holm House, famous for resisting a siege by Colonel Briggs in the civil war of Charles I. On the shore of the lake stand Windermere Hotel, Windermere College, besides numerous country seats of the nobility and gentry. The par. includes the tnshps. of Ambleside, Troutbeck, and Undermilbeck, the vil. of Bowness, and the hmlts. of Lindreth, Storrs, and Winster, and prior to 1856 the tnshp. of Applethwaite, now a separate ecclesiastical district. The population of the whole parish in 1861 was 4,223, of which, however, 1,235 were within the limits of the new parish of St. Mary Applethwaite. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Carlisle, val. £255. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, is in the village of Bowness, and has a stained E. window formerly belonging to Furness Abbey. There are besides the modern church of St. Mary in Applethwaite, and an ancient chapel in Troutbeck named Jesus chapel. There are National, Sunday, and other schools. The Earl of Lonsdale is lord of the manor.

WINDERTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Brailes, co. Warwick, 4 miles E. of Shipston-on-Stour.

WINDGAP, a hmlt. in the bar. of Kells, co. Kilkenny, 3 miles W. of Kilmaganny.

WINDGATE, a hmlt. in the bar. of Rathdown, co. Wicklow, Ireland, 2 miles S.E. of Bray. It is situated under Windgate Hill, which rises to the height of 500 feet.

WINDGATE, a shoal off Holy Island, co. Northumberland.

WINDHAM AND EWHURST, a hund. in the rape of Bramber, co. Sussex, contains the pars. of Cowfold and Shermanbury, comprising 5,720 acres.

WINDHILL, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Idle, and par. of Calverley, West Riding co. York, 4 miles N.E. of Bradford.

WINDLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Prescot, co. Lancaster, 3 miles N.E. of Prescot, and 1 mile N. of St. Helen's. It is situated near the Sankey canal, and contains the hmlt. of Hardshaw St. Helen's.

WINDLESHAM, a par. in the first div. of Woking hund., 7 miles S.W. of Chertsey, and 1½ mile N.E. of Bagshot. It is situated under Chobham Ridge, and contains the hmlt. of Bagshot. At Hatton Hill are the nursery-grounds of Messrs. Mason and Son, and on Bagshot Heath is a large rectangular camp. The principal seats are Bagshot Park and Hall Grove. The soil is a mixture of peat and Bagshot sand. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £500, with 60 acres of glebe, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has an inscription recording the destruction of the former edifice by lightning in 1680. There is a chapel-of-ease at Bagshot, and six almshouses and National schools. The parochial charities produce about £35 per annum. Lord Onslow is lord of the manor.

WINDLESTONE, a tnshp. in the par. of St. Andrew Auckland, S.E. div. of Darlington ward, co. Durham, 4 miles S.E. of Bishop Auckland. It is a meet for the Raby hounds. At Rushyforth is a National school, partially endowed by Sir R. Eden, Bart., of Windlestone House.

WINDLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Duffield, co. Derby, 3 miles S.W. of Belper, and 6½ N.W. of Derby.

WINDRIDGE, a ward in the par. of St. Stephen, hund. of Cashio, co. Herts, 2 miles S.W. of St. Alban's.

WINDRUSH, a par. in the lower div. of Slaughter hund., co. Gloucester, 5 miles S.E. of Northleach. The village is situated on the Windrush rivulet, which rises among the Cotswold hills, and joins the Thames near Standlake. There is a valuable quarry of white oolite building stone belonging to Lord Sherborne. The living is a vic., united to that of Sherborne in 1776. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains some old tombs. There are day and Sunday schools, chiefly supported by Lord Sherborne. The charities produce about £24 per annum, besides 10 acres of poor's land.

WINDSOR, NEW, a par., market town, municipal, and parliamentary borough, locally in Ripplesmere hund., co. Berks, 2 miles from Slough, 6 from Maidenhead, and 22 S.W. of London, with which it is connected by the Great Western and London and South-Western railways. It is situated on an acclivity above the right bank of the navigable river Thames, here crossed by an iron bridge 200 feet long and 29 feet wide, resting upon three piers of granite. The village of Old Windsor, about 2 miles S.E. of the present town of New Windsor, was a place of great antiquity, on the Roman way from Silchester, and is mentioned in early deeds as Windlesofra, or Windlesora, where the Saxon kings had a palace. The manor was given by Edward the Confessor to Westminster Abbey, but afterwards exchanged back by William the Norman, who built a hunting lodge at New Windsor, on the site of the present castle. In 1276, New Windsor was made a free borough, and returned two members to parliament once in the reigns of Edward I. and Edward III., but not again till that of Henry VI., from which time it has continued to send two representatives. The bounds under the Reform Bill of 1832 include the par. of New Windsor, with the upper and lower castle wards, Dedworth, and part of the suburb of Clewer, lying on the western side of the town. It is divided into two wards, and is governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, assisted by a high steward, recorder, treasurer, town clerk, and other officers, with the style of "mayor, bailiffs, and burgesses of the borough of New Windsor." The municipal revenue amounts to about £2,100. There is a separate commission of the peace, consisting of five justices, who hold petty sessions twice a week, and quarter sessions. The town consists of six principal streets, intersected by several smaller ones, and has many well-built houses, chiefly of brick. It is well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. There are also some sporting establishments connected with the race-course at Ascot, large preserves of game, several ecclesiastical foundations, and great facilities for hunting, boating, and fishing. The principal public buildings are a spacious guildhall on arches, built by Sir Christopher Wren in 1686, with statues of Queen Anne and Prince George of Denmark outside, and portraits of many sovereigns and distinguished personages in the court rooms; beneath the hall is held the corn-market; the theatre in Thames-street was built in 1815 at a cost of near £60,000; the borough gaol is a small building; there are also a savings-bank, dispensary and infirmary, branch bank, infantry barracks in Sheet-street, cavalry barracks at Spital, and George III.'s jubilee pillar at Bachelor's Acre, an old public playground. The great glory, however, of Windsor is its castle, situated on a gentle acclivity, partly artificial, commanding a view of the Thames, with parts of 12 counties, the distant metropolis, and St. Paul's cathedral distinctly visible from the top of the watch, or flag turret. This pile originated in a hunting-lodge, or military post, founded by William the Conqueror in 1071, in connection with the original palace of the Saxon kings at Old Windsor about two miles distant, and which continued to be occasionally occupied by the English kings until 1110, when Henry I., having rebuilt the lodge, or castle, of New Windsor, for the first time kept his court there at Whitsuntide, and in 1122 celebrated his nuptial festivities with the Princess Adelais of Lorraine. After this, Old Windsor lost its consequence, and the present castle became the state palace of the English sovereigns. In 1170, Henry II. held a parliament here, and in 1216, John was besieged in it by the barons. In the baronial wars of Henry III. it was frequently attacked by the contending parties, and in 1263, was occupied by Simon de Montfort and the barons. The next kings frequently resided at Windsor, and Edward III. was born in the castle, from which circumstance he received the name of Edward of Windsor. He held a tournament here in 1344, and instituted the Order of the Garter in 1349. Under this sovereign the castle was entirely rebuilt by William of Wykeham, who was appointed clerk of the works in 1366, with a fee of one shilling a day whilst at Windsor, and two shillings when elsewhere. No part of William I.'s lodge was preserved, except three towers at the western end of the lower ward. In 1373 were completed the King's Palace, the Great Hall of St. George, or banqueting room, 180 feet by 32, where the Knights of the Garter are installed, and where is the throne; the Round Tower, or Keep, which is machicolated, as are most of the larger towers, and 148 feet high from the quadrangle, or 295 feet from the level of the Little Park to the top of the flag-staff; the chapel of St. George, subsequently rebuilt by Edward IV.; the lodgings on the E. and S. sides of the upper ward, the houses of the canons in the lower ward; and the whole of the walls with the towers and gates covering an area of 12 acres. Most of the succeeding kings contributed in some way to the building. Henry VII. restored the choir, and added new buildings in the upper ward; Henry VIII. built the lower ward gate leading to the town; Edward VI. and Mary built the fountain; Elizabeth formed the N. terrace, which commands the celebrated view, and which, as extended by Charles II., measures 1,870 feet in length, surrounding the three sides of the castle, and having a corridor 450 feet by 15, replete with portraits and works of art. Charles I. built the Park gate, and was prisoner here in 1648, in the hands of the parliament, who garrisoned the castle in 1652 and 1659. In the reigns of Charles II. and James II. great improvements were effected in the interior, and most of the ceilings were painted by Verrio. The galleries and state apartments were likewise furnished with the choicest works of the first masters in place of the royal pictures which had disappeared during the Revolution. George III. restored the N. front of the upper ward, and St. George's chapel; but to George IV. is due the completely restoring, at a cost of near a million of money, this the most magnificent building of the kind in Europe. Her gracious Majesty the Queen has carried out many minor improvements, and has recently caused to be inserted a memorial window, by Scott, in the royal chapel of St. George's, in memory of his late Royal Highness the Prince Consort, who exerted himself so nobly on the 19th of March, 1853, in extinguishing the fire which broke out in the Prince of Wales' Tower, at the N.E. angle of the castle, and at one time threatened serious consequences to the whole structure, but was fortunately confined to the tower in which it originated, causing damage only to the amount of £6,000. To attempt any adequate description of the beauties and art treasures of this state castle of the British sovereigns would be beyond the scope of the present work, and may be more agreeably studied by a visit to the castle, the state apartments being viewable by Lord Chamberlain's ticket on any days except Wednesday and Sunday, and the private apartments during the absence of the court. The stables attached to the palace are on a large scale, and have a good riding school. In the Little, or Home, Park, consisting of 500 acres of land, first laid out by William III., is Frogmore, the favourite seat of Queen Charlotte, and more recently of the Duchess of Kent. In an adjacent park, known as Queen Elizabeth's Walk, is the site of Herne the Hunter's Oak, celebrated by Shakspeare, the shattered trunk of which was blown down on the 31st of August, 1863. The Fairie's Dell has been partially filled up, but the late Prince Consort had much of the earth removed, when the remains of large oaks in an upright position were discovered. Here, too, are the Queen's poultry-houses, and the royal gardens, with a range of 920 feet of glasshouses. The Long Walk, an avenue of elms 3 miles long by 290 feet broad, leads to the colossal equestrian statue of George III., in bronze, by Westmacott, 26 feet high, on a rough pedestal of 40 feet. The Great Park, which we have now entered, covers 10,000 acres, containing plantations of beech, oak, elms, and chestnut, part of which is navy timber. It contains the Norfolk Farm of 1,000 acres, the Flemish Farm of 400, both established by George III.; the Model Farm of the late Prince Consort; Virginia Water, an artificial lake surrounded by plantations, with a fishing temple, and a group of the Elgin marbles; the Sandpit-gate heronry; Cranbourn Tower, once the residence of the Princess Charlotte; Cumberland Lodge, built for the Duke of Cumberland, who, as ranger, after the battle of Culloden, lived here, and to whose memory there is a pillar in the same part of the forest as the King's Oak, a hollow stump 7 to 8 feet in diameter, traditionally stated to have been a favourite of William the Conqueror. There are also oaks named after Queens Anne, Caroline, Charlotte, Adelaide, and her gracious Majesty Victoria, the last being bare for 50 feet up. Many princes and great men have been imprisoned in the round tower and other parts of the castle, including John, King of France; David, of Scotland; James I., of Scotland, who wrote his "King's Quhair," or book, when prisoner here in 1414-7; Earl of Surrey, the poet, who wrote his verses to his mistress; Charles I.; the Earls of Lauderdale and Lindsay; and the Marshal de Belleisle. The Marquis of Bute takes the inferior title of Earl from Windsor, and Garter King-at-Arms, the style of Windsor Herald. It is the head of New County Court, Poor-law Union, and Superintendent Registry district. One newspaper, the Windsor and Eton Express, is published in the town. The population of the borough in 1851 was 9,596, and in 1861, 9,520, inhabiting 1,577 houses. The collegiate church is within the castle, and is officiated by the dean and canons under the Bishop of Winchester, who is Prelate of the Garter. The living, however, of the par. of New Windsor is a vic. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £1,050, in the patron. of the lord chancellor, besides which there is the district of Holy Trinity, a perpet. cur., val. £650. The parish or high church of Windsor, as it is called, is situated in the High-street, and dedicated to St. John the Baptist. It is a Gothic structure, rebuilt in 1822 at a cost of £14,000, on the site of an older one. In the interior are an altar-piece, representing "The Last Supper," carved railings by Grinling Gibbons, brought from St. George's chapel-royal, and some old monuments, including a bust of Chief Justice Reeves, and tombs of Mrs. Braham and Topham Foot, by Schumaker. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists have chapels; and there are British, National, infant, Sunday, and endowed schools. The charities amount to about £3,000 per annum, including Travers' and Brathwaite's for naval knights, £2,000; Archbishop Laud's and Randal's for apprenticeship and dowry, £200; a free loan of £1,000, annuities of £10 each to 14 poor widows, almshouses for 28 poor persons, and a bread fund of £100, besides a dispensary, lying-in charity, soldiers' hospital, ladies' charity, and benevolent and philanthropic undertakings. On St. Leonard's Hill are traces of a Roman camp, and an ancient way went from Staines by Sunning Hill to Cæsar's camp on Bagshot Heath. Market days are Wednesday and Saturday for meat and provisions, and Saturday for corn. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, 5th July, and 24th October.

WINDSOR, OLD, a par. in the hund. of Ripplesmere, co. Berks, 2 miles S.E. of New Windsor, 2½ from Egham, and 2 from Datchet. It is situated on the river Thames, and includes the hmlt. of Sunningdale and part of Virginia Water. The village, which has the union poor-house, may be considered a suburb of New Windsor [which see]. The principal seats are Beaumont, once the residence of Warren Hastings; Moat Farm, occupying the site of a hunting-seat of the Saxon kings, at which Earl Godwin is said to have died; Sunning Hall, and Corvath. Above two-thirds of the surface are comprehended in Windsor Great Park. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £250, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There are besides the district church of the Holy Trinity at Sunningdale, built in 1840, and the royal chapel, built by George IV. in the Great Park for the accommodation of the tenantry and keepers connected with the royal demesnes. The Independents have chapels at Old Windsor and Sunningdale. There are National and industrial schools, partly supported by bequests of Lady Onslow and Mrs. Harmesley. The Rev. G. Isherwood is lord of the manor. A pleasure fair is held annually.

WINDYEDGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Sanquhar, co. Dumfries, Scotland, near Sanquhar.

WINDYGATES, a vil. in the par. of Markinch, co. Fife, Scotland, 2 miles W. of Leven, on the river Leven. A fair for cattle is held on the second Friday in March.

WINDY-HARBOUR, a hmlt. in the bar. of Rathdown, co. Dublin, Ireland, 3 miles S.E. of Dublin.

WINDY-HARBOUR, a hmlt. in the bar. of Upper Slane, co. Meath, Ireland, 6 miles N.W. of Slane.

WINDY-NOOK, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Heworth, par. of Jarrow, co. Durham, 2½ miles S.E. of Gateshead. It is situated near the river Tyne, and has the district church of St. Alban.

WINESTEAD, a par. in the S. div. of Holderness wap., East Riding co. York, 2 miles N.W. of Patrington, and 13 from Hull. It is a station on the Hull and Holderness branch of the North-Eastern railway. The soil is clayey, alternated with sand. There are brick and tile works. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of York, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. German, is surrounded by trees, having on the S. side a chantry chapel, now used as the burial-place of the Hildyard family. There is a village school, supported by T. B. Hildyard, Esq., of Winestead Hall, who is lord of the manor. Andrew Marvel, M.P. for Hull in the reign of Charles I., was born here in 1621, during the incumbency of his father, the friend of Milton.

WINEWALL, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Trawden Forest, par. of Whalley, co. Lancaster, 2 miles S.E. of Colne.

WINFARTHING, a par. in the hund. of Diss, co. Norfolk, 4 miles N.W. of Diss, and 3 N.W. of Burston station on the Great Eastern railway. In ancient times it formed part of the royal demesne, but was given by Henry III. to Sir William Montchesney or Munchensy, who had a seat here, and through whom the inhabitants are exempt from serving on juries. A deer park, which was enclosed by the Earl of Arundel in 1604, is now the property of the Earl of Albemarle, who resides at Quidenham. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich. The church is dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities produce about £140 per annum, the produce of a poors' allotment of 82 acres. There is a Sunday-school. The Earl of Albemarle is lord of the manor.

WINFIELD, a tnshp. in the par. and hund. of Wrotham, lathe of Aylesford, co. Kent, 3 miles S. of Wrotham.

WINFORD, a par. in the hund. of Hartcliffe, co. Somerset, 5 miles S.W. of Bristol. It includes the hmlts. of Felton and Ridghill. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £480, in the gift of Worcester College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to SS. Mary and Peter, was rebuilt in 1796, with the exception of the tower. The Baptists have a chapel. There are National and Sunday schools.

WINFORD EAGLE, a par. chplry. in the hund. of Tollerford, co. Dorset, 9 miles N.W. of Dorchester, and 1½ mile S.W. of Maiden-Newton. It is a chapelry to Toller-Fratrum. On Fern Down are several barrows, in one of which 17 urns, containing ashes and charred bones, were discovered. This place gives title of baron to Lord Wynford, whose seat is here. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to the vic. of Toller-Fratrum, joint val. £160. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, was erected in 1842.

WINFORTON, a par. in the hund. of Huntingdon, co. Hereford, 6 miles S. of Kington, and 5 N.E. of Hay. The village is situated near the river Wye, and is traversed by the railroad from Hay to Kington. It is said to have had a hermitage at Chapel Close, founded in the reign of Edward I. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £220. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The charities produce about £20 per annum, including Mr. Freeman's bequest towards the support of a school.

WINFRITH, a hund. of South Blandford div. of co. Dorset, contains the pars. of Coombe Keynes, East Lulworth, Moreton, Poxwell, East Stoke, Warmwell, Watercombe, Winfrith-Newburgh, and Woodsford, comprising 20,490 acres.

WINFRITH-NEWBURGH, a par. in the above hund., co. Dorset, 9 miles S.W. of Wareham, 10 N.E. of Weymouth, and 3 S.W. of Wool railway station. The village was formerly the property of the Newburghs, who had a seat here. Near the hamlet of Bromehill a tributary of the Frome is crossed by three bridges, built in 1769. The par. includes the chplry. of Burton and the hmlt. of Knighton. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. with the curs. of Burton and West Lulworth, £740, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Christopher, was enlarged in 1854. There is a National school. Bishops Lindwood and Atkyns were formerly rectors.

WING, a par. in the hund. of Martinsley, co. Rutland, 3 miles N.E. of Uppingham, and three quarters of a mile from the Manton station of the Syston and Peterborough railway. The village is situated near the river Chater, and has at a little distance an ancient maze. The manor, anciently called Wenge, was given by the Montfords to Thorney Abbey, and now belongs to the Marquis of Exeter. About half the land is arable, and the remainder grass. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £340, with 200 acres of glebe, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. There is a Wesleyan chapel, and a National school built in 1851. The charities produce about £3 per annum.

WING, a par. in the hund. of Cottesloe, co. Bucks, 3 miles S.W. of Leighton-Buzzard. The village is situated near a branch of the river Ouse and the Grand Junction canal. The line of the London and North-Western railway runs along the eastern boundary of the parish, and the road from Oxford to Cambridge passes through the village. The par. includes the hmlts. of Ascott, where was once a Benedictine priory founded by the Empress Maud; Burcott, Crafton, Littleworth, and Wingberry; also Wing Park, which is still enclosed, but its mansion, Ascott House, the ancient seat of the Dormers, and afterwards of the Earls of Chesterfield, has been pulled down. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £340. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains an antique font and tombs of the Dormers. The edifice has recently been restored. There are National schools for both sexes, built in 1850 by Lord Overstone, and almshouses, called Dormer's Hospital, founded in 1562 by Lady Dorothy Pelham, with an income from endowment of £60 per annum. The other charities produce about £35 per annum.

WINGATE, a tnshp. in the par. of Kelloe, co. Durham, 7 miles S.E. of Durham. It is a station on the Hartlepool and Ferryhill branch of the North-Eastern railway. The village is of recent growth, having sprung out of the Wingate Grange colliery. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £150, in the patron. of the bishop.

WINGATES, a tnshp. in the par. of Long Horsley, Morpeth ward, co. Northumberland, 5 miles S.E. of Rothbury. It contains the hmlts. of Chirm, Garrotlee, and Wholm, and an uninclosed tract called Wingates Moor.

WINGBERRY, a hmlt. in the par. of Wing, co. Bucks, 5 miles S.W. of Leighton-Buzzard.

WINGERWORTH, a par. in the hund. of Scarsdale, co. Derby, 2½ miles S.W. of Chesterfield. It is situated on the line of the Midland railway, the ancient Icknield Street and river Rother, and has some "rock-basins" at Stainedge Cliff. The surface is hilly, and the substratum abounds in coal, iron-stone, and freestone. It is chiefly the property of Sir H. J. J. Hunloke, Bart., who is lord of the manor, and resides at the Hall, rebuilt in 1724 on the site of the former hall, which was taken possession of and garrisoned for the parliament in 1643. The par. includes the hmlts. of Hockley, Nethermoor, and Stubbing, with Swathwick annexed. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £100, in the patron. of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains tombs of the Brailsford, Curzon, and Hunloke families, who have successively held the manor. There are a Roman Catholic chapel, and a school for the free education of 29 children, supported by an endowment of £30 per annum. The brass head of a catapult was found on the line of the Roman road.

WINGFIELD, a hmlt. in the par. of Chalgraves, co. Beds, 3 miles N.W. of Dunstable.

WINGFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Hoxne, co. Suffolk, 3 miles N. of Stradbroke, and 6 N.E. of Eye. It is situated on a branch of the river Waveney, and has the remains of a castle or moated seat of the De la Poles, built by Michael, first Earl of Suffolk, in the reign of Richard II., and of a college or priory founded in 1362 for a provost and nine priests. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £100, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was made collegiate in 1362, and has some remains of ancient stained glass in the chancel, an old font, and monuments to the De la Poles, Earls of Suffolk; but the monumental brasses to the ancient family of Wingfield, who once possessed the manor, have all disappeared. There is a good schoolhouse in the churchyard.

WINGFIELD. See WINKFIELD, cos. Wilts and Berks.

WINGFIELD, NORTH, a par. in the hund. of Scarsdale, co. Derby, 4 miles S.E. of Chesterfield. It is situated on the river Rother, and the Roman Icknield Street near the line of the North Midland railway, which has a station at Clay Cross, where it is carried through a tunnel 1,760 yards long, 22 feet wide, and 26 high. The expense of constructing this tunnel is said to have been £100 per yard, or £176,000. The parish comprises 7,603 acres, and has increased in population from 3,144 in 1841 to 7,339 in 1861, or more than double in 20 years. The cause of this prosperity was the opening up of the extensive coal, lime, and ironstone beds, the Clay Cross colliery and ironworks alone employing above 600 hands. The par. contains the tnshps. of Claylane, Pilsley, Stretton, Tupton, North Wingfield, and Woodthorp. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £1,200. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence or St. Leonard, is situated at some distance from the village. There are, besides the district church at Clay Cross, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, chapels for Wesleyans and New Connexion Methodists, also a mechanics' institute. The charities produce about £90 per annum. There are British, National, and other schools.

WINGFIELD, SOUTH, a par. in the hund. of Scarsdale, co. Derby, 2 miles W. of Alfreton, 10 S. of Chesterfield, and 14 N. of Derby. It is a station on the North Midland railway. The manor was held by the Peverells at the time of the Domesday survey, and came through the families of Heriz and Bellers to Lord Treasurer Cromwell, who built the castle or manor-house in the reign of Henry VI., some portion of which remains adjoining the modern mansion. It was here that Mary Queen of Scots was retained prisoner nine years, under the charge of the Earl of Shrewsbury and Sir R. Sadler; and during the civil war of Charles I. the manor-house was garrisoned for the parliamentarians, but was taken by the Earl of Newcastle in 1643, and retaken by Gell in 1646, when it was dismantled. The manor afterwards came to the Haltons, and now belongs to several proprietors, but that of Oakerthorpe belongs to the Duke of Devonshire, who is the principal landowner. The par., which is watered by the river Amber, includes the hmlt. of Oakerthorpe, and the collieries of Oakerthorpe, Wingfield, and Highthorpe. The principal employment is in connection with the collieries, framework knitting, and a twist manufactory. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £1,022. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is situated in the hamlet of Oakerthorpe, and has a monument to Halton, the mathematician. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The charities produce about £60 per annum, including Strelley's charity at Oakerthorpe.

WINGFORD. See WENTWORTH, co. Cambridge.

WINGHAM, a hund. in the lathe of St. Augustine, co. Kent, contains the pars. of Ash-next-Sandwich, Goodnestone, Nonington, Wingham, and Womenswould, comprising 16,590 acres.

WINGHAM, a par. and post town in the above hund., co. Kent, 6 miles E. of Canterbury. It is situated on the road from Canterbury to Sandwich, near the line of the London and South-Eastern railway, and is watered by a small stream falling into the river Stour. The village was formerly a market town under the archbishops of Canterbury, who had a palace here, but the market has long since fallen into disuse. In the reign of Charles I. the manor came to Earl Cowper, who takes the title of baron from this place, of which he is the chief proprietor, together with Sir Brook Bridges, Bart. Petty sessions are held monthly, on the first Thursday in every month. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the archdeaconry and dioc. of Canterbury, val. £104. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains carved stalls, and monuments to the Oxendens of Deane, and Palmers of Wingham Court, which latter was once the lodge to a priory founded here in 1286 by Archbishop Peckham. There are chapels for Independents and Wesleyans, and National and infant schools. The charities produce about £24 per annum, of which £16 was bequeathed by Sir James Oxenden in 1686, towards the support of a school. Fairs are held on 12th May and 12th November.

WINGRAVE, a par. in the Ivinghoe div. of the hund of Cottesloe, co. Bucks, 5½ miles N.E. of Aylesbury. It is situated on a hill near the river Thame. The soil is a strong clay, producing good crops of wheat and beans. The par. includes the hmlt. of Rowsham, where was once a chapel-of-ease. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £120. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The charities produce about £60 per annum, besides half an acre of grass land, left for the purpose of strewing the church with hay on the first Sunday after St. Peter's day, a custom which has been practised here from time immemorial.

WINKBURN, a par. in the N. div. of Thurgarton wap., co. Notts, 8 miles N.W. of Newark, and 3½ N.W. of Southwell railway station. It takes its name from the small river Winke, which joins the Trent at Averham. The manor was granted by Adam Tyson to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and after the Dissolution was given by Edward VI. to William Burnell, in exchange for the rectory and lands at Beachworth in Surrey, in whose family it still remains. Adjoining the village is the Hall, built about the close of the 17th century, and surrounded by a park of about 80 acres. The living is a don. cur. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £60. There is a free school, founded in 1738 by the Burnells, and endowed with £30 per annum.

WINKELBURY, a lofty hill on the Downs, co. Wilts, near Cranbourn Chase. On its summit, 941 feet above sea level, is an ancient camp of 12½ acres.

WINKFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Ripplesmere, co. Berks, 5½ miles S.W. of Windsor, and 26 from London. The parish is 8 miles across, and includes the course on which the Ascot races are held: a smooth surface formed by William, Duke of Cumberland, and recently much improved. The village is situated on the road from London through Windsor Forest to Reading. The par. includes the hmlt. of Cranbourne. Petty sessions are held on the third Monday in every month. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £500, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a brass representing one of the Montagues, and several monuments to the Metcalfe family. There is besides a new church recently erected in the village of Cranbourne. There are two public schools: one called the School of Industry, was established in 1835 by Rham, who once held the living, and wrote the agricultural articles in the Penny Cyclopædia; and a free school, built and endowed by Lord Ranelagh in 1710, on Winkfield Plain, with a chapel attached.

WINKFIELD, a par. in the hund. of Bradford, co. Wilts, 2½ miles S. of Bradford, and 2 S.W. of Trowbridge. The vil. includes the tythg. of Rowley. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £240, in the patron. of trustees. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The charities produce about £4 per annum. J. Houlton, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WINKHILL, a hmlt. in the par. of Waterfall, co. Stafford, 7 miles N.E. of Cheadle.

WINKLEIGH, a par. in the hund. of the same name, co. Devon, 6 miles S.W. of Chulmleigh, 21 N.W. of Exeter, and 4 W. of the Eggesford railway station. It is intersected by the new road from Torrington to Exeter, and, with the tythg. of Loosebeare, forms a distinct hundred. It is in parts well wooded and fertile, but includes a large tract of barren moor. The soil is dunland, upon a subsoil of clay and rock. Courts leet and baron are held annually. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £312, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, dedicated to All Saints, commands a view embracing 24 parish churches and the distant hills of Dartmoor. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Bible Christians have chapels. The charities produce about £20 per annum. There are National schools, also an endowed almshouse, called Gidley's, for widows. Fairs are held on the first Monday after 7th July, and the first Wednesday in October for cattle. The Rev. P. Johnson, of Winkleigh Court, is lord of the manor.

WINKSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Ripon, West Riding co. York, 4 miles W. of Ripon, on a branch of the river Ure.

WINKTON, a tythg. in the par. of Christchurch, co. Hants, 3 miles N. of Christchurch, on the river Avon.

WINLATON, a district, par., and tnshp. in the W. div. of Chester ward, co. Durham, 5 miles W. of Gateshead, and 6 W. of Newcastle. The par., comprising the tnshp. of Winlaton, the tnshp. and chplry. of Chopwell, the ecclesiastical district of Winlaton St. Paul, and the hmlts. of Barton and Winlayton Mill, was formed into a separate parish in 1832, by an Order in Council, out of the parish of Ryton, and lies between the rivers Derwent and Tyne. The village occupies an elevated site on the W. bank of the river Derwent, and owes its rise to the extensive ironworks removed hither from Sunderland by Sir Ambrose Crawley in 1691, for carrying on which the neighbourhood affords peculiar advantages in the abundance of coal and facility of water-carriage. Anchors, anvils, chains, spades, shovels, edge-tools, files, &c., are largely manufactured. There are also works for refining lead on the banks of the Tyne, some excellent stone quarries, and extensive collieries at Blaydon Main and High Spen, the latter belonging to the Marquis of Bute, who is lord of the manor of Chopwell, and, with Lord Ravensworth, Joseph Cowen, and J. Rowes, Esqs., of that of Winlaton. The soil and subsoil are clay, but produce good crops of wheat, barley, and oats, with a proportion of pasture. The population in 1861 was 7,372. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £350, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Paul. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Chopwell. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Presbyterians have chapels, and there are National schools for both sexes at Winlaton and Barlow. The principal seat is Axwell Park, the property of Sir W. Clavering, Bart., forming a manor of itself.

WINMARLEIGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Garstang, hund. of Amounderness, co. Lancaster, 2 miles N.W. of Garstang.

WINMOOR, a hmlt. in the par. of Barwick-in-Elmett, wap. of Skyrack, West Riding co. York, 6 miles N.E. of Leeds. It is supposed to be the spot where Penda was defeated in 655, and at Hall Tower Hill are remains of a castle of the Northumbrian kings.

WINNALL, a par. in the hund. of Fawley, co. Hants, three quarters of a mile N.E. of Winchester. It is situated on the eastern bank of the river Itchin, and is partly comprised within the borough of Winchester. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £180, in the patron. of the bishop.

WINNERSH, a lib. in the par. of Hurst, co. Berks, 3 miles N. of Wokingham.

WINNIBRIGGS AND THREO, a wap. in the parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, contains the pars. of East and West Allington, Barrowby, Boothby-Pagnell, Grantham, Honington, Little Poniton, Ropsley, Sedgebrook, Somerby, Stroxton, Syston, Welby, Wilsford, Woolsthorpe, Wyvill, and parts of Haydor and South Stoke, comprising 37,270 acres, exclusive of Grantham.

WINTERBORNE-ABBAS, a par. in the hund. of Eggerton, co. Dorset, 4 miles N.E. of Abbotsbury, and 5 W. of Dorchester. The village is situated in a vale on the high road from Dorchester to Bridport. It takes its name from the South Winterborne stream, which rises a little to the W. of the village, within a Druid circle formed of rough stones, called the Nine Stones. On the surrounding hills are numerous barrows, a cromlech, and traces of a Roman encampment. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, united to that of Winterborne Steeple, joint val. £435, in the patron. of Lincoln College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The living was once held by Bishop Ironside.

WINTERBORNE-ANDERSTON. See ANDERSTON-WINTERBORNE, co. Dorset.

WINTERBORNE-CAME, a par. partly in the lib. of Frampton, and partly in the hund. of Culliford Tree, co. Dorset, 2 miles S.E. of Dorchester, on the road from Dorchester to Wareham. The par. includes the hmlts. of Cripton, Middle and Higher Came, and Winterborne-Faringdon—which last is extra-parochial, but, having no inhabitants, is in this parish. It had formerly a priory cell to the abbey of Caen, in Normandy. There is a large extent of woodland. The soil is clayey upon a substratum of chalk and gravel. The living is a rect.* with that of Winterborne-Faringdon united, joint val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains two effigies and monuments. The church in the quondam parish of Winterborne-Faringdon is now in ruins.

WINTERBORNE-CLENSTONE, a par. in the hund. of Coombs Ditch, co. Dorset, 4 miles S.W. of Blandford. It was formerly a place of importance, having three churches. It takes its name from the northern Winterborne stream, a feeder of the Stour. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £160. The church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was rebuilt at the expense of Mrs. Michel in 1840. There is a school, lately built by Mrs. Michel.

WINTERBORNE-HERRINGSTONE, a par. in the hund. of Culliford Tree, co. Dorset, 1 mile S. of Dorchester. It anciently belonged to Siward the Saxon, and subsequently came through the Herrings, to the Williams family. The hall contains several historical portraits by Kneller, and Bible carvings on the large window. There is no church, and only a few farmhouses.

WINTERBORNE-HOUGHTON. See HOUGHTON, co. Dorset.

WINTERBORNE-KINGSTON, a chplry. in the hund. of Bere-Regis, co. Dorset, 6 miles S.W. of Blandford, contains Abbotts Court and Muston. The living is a cur. annexed to the vic. of Bere-Regis. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. The register commences in 1598, but is imperfect. The Independents and Wesleyans have chapels.

WINTERBORNE-MONCKTON, a par. in the hund. of Culliford Tree, co. Dorset, 2 miles S.W. of Dorchester, and 6 N. of Weymouth. It had once an alien priory cell, founded by King John, subordinate to Cluni Abbey. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £159.

WINTERBORNE ST. MARTIN, or MARTINSTOWN, a par. in the hund. of St. George, co. Dorchester, 3 miles S.W. of Dorchester, and 8 N.W. of Weymouth. The village is situated in a valley, and had formerly a market granted by Henry III., but long since disused. The par. includes the tythg. of Ashton. Here is Maiden Castle, one of the strongest Roman camps in the W. of England, covering 115 acres, with a treble ditch and ramparts oval in shape, and commanding an extensive prospect. According to Ptolemy, it was the castra æstiva of the garrison of Dunium, afterwards called Durnovaria, the capital of the Durotriges. At a little distance from the eastern gate of the camp passes the vicinal road leading from Dorchester to Weymouth, and on the W. extends a branch of the Via Iceniana. On Four Barrow Hill and Clandon are many tumuli. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £73, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. There are National and Sunday schools, built in 1841. A fair is held on St. Martin's-day for cattle.

WINTERBORNE-STEEPLETON, a par. in the hund. of Uggscombe, co. Dorset, 4 miles S.W. of Dorchester, and 9 N.W. of Weymouth. The village is situated in a valley on the road from Weymouth to Bridport. The living is a rect. united to that of Winterborne-Abbas. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, has a curious S. porch. There is a school for this and the adjoining parish of Winterborne-Abbas.

WINTERBORNE-STRICKLAND, a par. in the hund. of Pimperne, co. Dorset, 3½ miles S.W. of Blandford-Forum. It includes the tythg. of Quarleston, the site of the old seat of the Binghams, the greater part of which has recently been pulled down. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £367. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a National school. The charities produce about £7 per annum, bequeathed by Barbara Skinner. Baron Hambro' is lord of the manor.

WINTERBORNE-THOMPSON, a par. in the hund. of Coombs Ditch, co. Dorset, 6 miles S. of Blandford.

WINTERBORNE-WHITCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Coombs Ditch, co. Dorset, 5 miles S.W. of Blandford. The par. includes the hmlt. of Whatcombe and Law Lee. The village is situated on the northern Winterbourne, a feeder of the Stour. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £100, in the patron.

of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an old font, and a register dating from 1600. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a National school, and a reformatory for boys. The Rev. Samuel Wesley, father of John and Charles Wesley, founders of the Methodists, was born here during the incumbency of his father, who was ultimately ejected for nonconformity.

WINTERBORNE-ZELSTONE, a par. in the hund. of Rushmore, co. Dorset, 6¼ miles S.E. of Blandford. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £250. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel. There are parochial and infant schools.

WINTERBOURN, a chplry. in the par. of Chieveley, co. Berks, 3 miles N.W. of Newbury.

WINTERBOURNE, a par. in the upper div. of Langley hund., co. Gloucester, 6 miles N.E. of Bristol, and 4 S.W. of Yate railway station. This place, situated on the road from Bristol to Oxford, is watered by the small river Frome, and for ecclesiastical purposes was divided in 1834 under the Church Building Act into two distinct parishes, viz., Winterbourne, with the hmlt. of Watley's End, and St. John the Baptist, Frenchay, with the hmlt. of Hambrook. The soil is loamy, on a subsoil of limestone. There are stone quarries, iron-works, and a large hat manufactory. Both the livings are rects.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, the former val. £845, in the gift of St. John's College, Oxford, and the latter £153, besides 180 acres of glebe. The mother church, dedicated to St. Mary, or St. Michael, was rebuilt in 1843 on the site of the old one of the time of Henry II. The church, dedicated to St. John Baptist, at Frenchay, is likewise modern. At Winterbourne the Wesleyans have a chapel, and at Frenchay there are chapels for Independents, Socinians, and Society of Friends. There are National schools in connection with both churches, and an infant school at Winterbourne. The charities produce about £130 per annum, besides ten almshouses built in 1851 by Mrs. Jones. Fairs are held on the 29th June and 18th October for cattle. Mrs. Wadham is lady of the manor of Winterbourne, and the Smyth family of that of Sturden Court.

WINTERBOURNE-BASSETT, a par. in the hund. of Selkley, co. Wilts, 7 miles N.W. of Marlborough, and 5½ S. of Wootton-Bassett. It is bounded on the N. and E. by extensive downs, over which are scattered numerous Druid stones and barrows. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £635, in the patron. of Magdalene College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, or St. Katherine, was restored in 1857. It contains a carved font and monuments of the Baskerville family, who long resided here. The register commences in 1681. There is a parochial school.

WINTERBOURNE DANTSEY, EARLS, and GUNNER, three adjoining pars. in the hund. of Alderbury, co. Wilts, 4 miles N.E. of Salisbury, and 2 S.E. of Porton railway station. These three villages are situated in the Bourne Valley, on the river Avon. In the vicinity is an ancient earthwork called Chlorus's camp, or Figbury Ring, from its circular form, including an area of about 15 acres. The livings of Dantsey and Earls are both perpet. curs. in the dioc. of Salisbury, the former val. £80, and the latter £160, in the patron. of the bishop, while that of Gunner or Cherborough, as it is sometimes called, is a rect.,* val. £235 and 9 acres of glebe. The church of Dantsey is dedicated to St. Edward, and was repaired and the chancel re-roofed in 1858; that of Earls, to St. Michael, and is a dilapidated Gothic structure, while that of Gunner is dedicated to St. Mary, and was repaired in 1810, having been much injured by the Roundheads. The registers all date from the reign of Elizabeth. At Dantsey is a chapel for New Connexion Methodists, at Hurdcot in the parish of Earls and at Gunner are chapels for Wesleyans. There is a National school at Dantsey for the children of this and the two adjoining parishes of Earls and Gunner.

WINTERBOURNE MONKTON, a par. in the hund. of Silkley, co. Wilts, 7 miles N.W. of Marlborough. The surface is flat and the soil light. The living is a vic. annexed to that of Avebury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. There is a parochial school with a small endowment bequeathed by the late Mr. Hitchcock.

WINTERBOURNE STOKE, a par. in the hund. of Branch and Dole, co. Wilts, 4½ miles W. of Amesbury, and 8 N.W. of Salisbury. The village is situated on the road from Amesbury to Hindon and Shaftesbury. The parish comprises an extent of down land forming part of Salisbury Plain. On the downs near Conegarth are many barrows and traces of an ancient encampment. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £220. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has recently been repaired, and the chancel rebuilt. There is a National school. Lord Ashburton is lord of the manor.

WINTERBURN, a tnshp. in the par. of Gargrave, E. div. of Staincliffe wap., West Riding co. York, 6 miles N.W. of Skipton. It is joined to Flasby.

WINTERCOTT, a tnshp. in the par. of Leominster, co. Hereford, 3 miles S.W. of Leominster. It is joined to Hide.

WINTERHAY, a tythg. in the par. of Ilminster, co. Somerset, 2 miles from Ilminster.

WINTERING-GARTHS, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Melbecks, par. of Grinton, North Riding co. York, 3 miles E. of Muker, near the river Swale.

WINTERINGHAM, a par. in the N. div. of Manley wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 7 miles W. of Barton-upon-Humber, 10 N.W. of Brigg, and 2 N. of Winterton. On the opposite shore of the Humber is a station of the Hull and Selby railway. The village, formerly a market town, is situated on the S. bank of the Humber, on which the Hull and Gainsborough steamers ply, and on the banks are wharves for corn, malt, timber, and coals. According to Dr. Stukeley, the ancient name of this place was Abontrus, occupying the site of the Roman town Ad Abum. Near the village is a chalybeate spring. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £657, in the patron. of Emanuel College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The register commences in 1562. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Independents have chapels. There are National schools for both sexes. The charities produce about £15 per annum. A pleasure fair is held on 14th July. Lord Carrington is lord of the manor.

WINTERSET, a tnshp. in the par. of Wragby, West Riding, co. York, 4 miles S.E. of Wakefield.

WINTERSLOW, a par. in the hunds. of Alderbury and Amesbury, co. Wilts, 6½ miles N.E. of Salisbury. The village is situated on the line of the old Roman road from Salisbury to Winchester. Near the Winterslow Hut are three barrows, one of which, on being opened some years since, was found to contain an arched vault of rude flints wedged together, enclosing two large sepulchral urns filled with relics, supposed to have been those of some illustrious British female; and near, an ancient cross; many Saxon and early Norman coins have been found cut into halves and quarters, hence the names of half-penny and farthing, or fourth-ing. Near this spot one of the horses of the Exeter mail coach was seized by a lioness in 1816, supposed to have escaped from a travelling menagerie. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £785, in the patron. of St. John's College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National schools.

WINTERTON, a par. and small market town in the N. div. of Manley wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 8 miles S.W. of Barton-upon-Humber, and 9 N.W. of Glandford Brigg. It is situated about two miles S. of the river Humber, and the same distance W. of the Ancholme, near the termination of the ancient Roman Fosse Road, where several tesselated pavements were discovered in 1747. There are a factory for agricultural implements and brick and tile works. The town is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water. The population in 1851 was 1,665, and in 1861, 1,780. There are a temperance hall and library. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £200, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are National schools, built in 1841, and a Wesleyan day-school. The charities produce about £17 per annum. Petty sessions are held here on the first and third Fridays in every month, and an annual feast on the 6th July. Wednesday is market day, chiefly for corn. Fairs are held on the Tuesday before Palm Sunday, and on the 23rd September, for cattle.

WINTERTON, a par. in the hund. of West Flegg, co. Norfolk, 8 miles N.W. of Yarmouth, and 21 from Norwich. The village is situated on the coast, and had once a market. The par. includes Winterton Ness, one of the chief promontories on the E. coast, which has a shoal under it a quarter of a mile long, and a large extent of sea-beach and warren. It is a coastguard station, and has a lighthouse, nearly 70 feet high, put up in 1790, and visible for 14 miles at sea. The Turnours of Shillinglee, who are lords of the manor, take from Winterton the title of earl. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with the chplry. of East Somerton annexed, £478. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity and All Saints. The register dates from 1717, but is imperfect. There is a wild fowl decoy of 20 acres, once the property of Joseph Hume, Esq., M.P., whose family hold much land here.

WINTHORPE, a par. in the wap. of Candleshoe, co. Lincoln, 4 miles N.E. of Burgh, 11 E. of Spilsby, and 6 E. of Gunby railway station. The village is situated about a mile from the sea-coast of the North Sea. The living is a vic. consolidated with that of Burgh, in the patron. of the Bishop of Lincoln. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains 2 brasses, dating from 1500, some oak carving, a standard with the legend of St. Hubert, and a new Scudamore organ, presented in 1859. The register dates from 1582. The charities produce about £7 per annum. Lord Monson is lord of the manor.

WINTHORPE, a par. in the N. div. of Newark wap., co. Notts, 2 miles N.E. of Newark. The village occupies an eminence on the banks of the Trent, near the line of the ancient Fosse Road. The chief seat is Winthorpe Hall, with a temple made out of the timber of the Spanish floating batteries, taken at the siege of Gibraltar. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £200. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was rebuilt in 1779, with the exception of the S. wall. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a small free school, endowed by Brewer with £48 per annum. The Duke of Newcastle is lord of the manor.

WINTNEY, HARTLEY. See HARTLEY-WINTNEY, co. Hants.

WINTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirby-Stephen, E. ward., co. Westmoreland, 1 mile N.E. of Kirby-Stephen. The village is situated near the river Eden, and contains a free school, founded in 1659.

WINTON, a tnshp. in the par of Kirby Sigston, North Riding co. York, 3½ miles N. of Northallerton. It includes the hmlts. of Hallikeld and Stank.

WINTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Pencaitland, co. Haddington, Scotland, 3 miles S.E. of Tranent, on the river Tyne.

WINTRINGHAM, a par. and tnshp. in the wap. of Buckrose, East Riding co. York, 6 miles N.E. of New Malton, and 3 from Rillington railway station. The par. includes the chplry. of Knapton, where is a station on the York and Scarborough section of the North-Eastern railway; the farm called Linton, where was a monastic cell belonging to the monks of Scarborough; and Newton Park, the demesne of Sir George Strickland, Bart., who is lord of the manor. The living is a don. cur. in the dioc. of York. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains an E. window, part of a carved screen, an open oak roof, piscina, sedilia, and various old monuments. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Knapton, a small ancient edifice, with bell turret. There are village schools at Wintringham and Knapton, the latter supported by the Tindall family.

WINWICK, a par. in the hund. of West Derby, co. Lancaster, 3 miles N. of Warrington, 2 S. of Newton-in-Mackerfield, and 3 S.W. of the Kenyon railway station, on the Manchester and Liverpool, and Kenyon and Leigh railways. It was once a populous parish, comprising near 25,000 acres, with a population of over 20,000, but has been much reduced by the erection of Ashton-in-Mackerfield, Newton-in-Mackerfield, and Southworth-with-Croft, into distinct parishes, so that the population of the parish proper in 1861 was only 704, and that of the tnshp. of Winwick-with-Hulme 451. The village of Winwick is situated on the turnpike road midway between Warrington and Newton-in-Mackerfield, not far from the Sankey canal, and the London and North-Western railway. According to some antiquarians, it was the ancient Maserfeld, where Oswald, king of Northumbria, was slain in 642; and at a place called Redbank, between the village of Winwick and the town of Newton, the Scots were defeated, in 1648, by Oliver Cromwell. The living is a rect.* in the deanery of Warrington, archdeaconry of Liverpool and bishopric of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Oswald, is supposed to be coeval with the establishment of the Christian religion in the country. It has two private chapels and a new chancel, added in 1847. In the interior are an inscription to St. Oswald, two ancient brasses of Sir P. Legh, of Lyme, with effigies bearing date 1527, and one to Gerard Bryn of 1492, besides an antique font and four painted windows. There are a free Grammar school, founded by Gualter Legh in 1618, with an income from endowment of £34; a Sunday-school and church schools for both sexes, supported by the rector, the Rev. F. G. Hopwood, who is lord of the manor.

WINWICK, a par. partly in the hund. of Leightonstone, co. Hunts, and partly in that of Polebrook, co. Northampton, 7 miles S.E. of Oundle, and 12 N.W. of Huntingdon. The village is situated about 4 miles off the road from Oundle to Huntingdon, on the borders of Northamptonshire. The soil is clayey. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £70. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has been recently repaired. The charities, including Ruff's bequest for the poor, produce about £20 per annum.

WINWICK, a par. in the hund. of Guilsborough, co. Northampton, 9 miles N.E. of Daventry. The village is situated on the Grand Union canal, which passes through the parish. The land is divided between arable and pasture. At Winwick common is a meet for the Pytchley hounds. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £500, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are parochial and Sunday schools for both sexes. The charities produce about £20 per annum. Sir James Langham is lord of the manor.

WIRKSWORTH, a hund. in co. Derby, contains the pars. of Ashover, Bentley-Fenny, Bonsall, Carsington, Hartington, Hognaston, Ireton Kirk, Kniveton, Mappleton, Matlock, Parwick, Thorpe, Tissington, and parts of Ashborne, Bradborne, Crich, Darley, Wirksworth, and Youlgrave, comprising 73,880 acres.

WIRKSWORTH, a par., market, polling, and petty sessions town, chiefly in the hund. of Wirksworth, but partly in those of Appletree and High Peak, co. Derby, 139 miles from London, 13 miles N.W. of Derby, 4 S. of Matlock, and 2 S.W. of Cromford, where the Cromford canal and High Peak railway have their termini. The Manchester and Buxton railway also passes close by, and it is itself a railway station. It is situated amongst the limestone hills, comprising 13,640 acres, with a population in 1861 of 7,098. The par. includes, besides the market-town of the same name, the tnshps. of Alderwasley, Ashleyhay, Biggin, Callow, Cromford, Hopton, Ible, Middleton, Idridgehay, with Atton and Cliffe Ash, and the hmlt. of Ironbrook Grange. Wirksworth was anciently written Werchesworde, and Wircesworth, and is supposed to have derived its name from extensive lead and barytes mines in the vicinity, which appear to have been worked so early as the 2nd century by the Romans, from the discovery of a pig of lead in 1777, with an inscription of the Emperor Adrian, and subsequently by the Saxons, who carried on mining operations here on an extensive scale. In the early Saxon times the manor belonged to the Abbey of Repton, but was conveyed by the Abbess Kenwara, in 835, to Humbert, on his engaging to furnish lead to the value of £15 annually to Archbishop Ceolnothbad for the use of Christ's Church, Canterbury. In the Domesday survey it is described as having a church, a priest, and three lead mines, and was then the property of the crown, but was subsequently granted by John to William de Ferrers, in whose family it remained till the attainder of Robert de Ferrers in the reign of Henry III., who presented it in 1265 to his son Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, since which period the manor has formed part of Tutbury Honour in the duchy of Lancaster. The town of Wirksworth, which, in 1861, had 2,592 inhabitants, is situated in a valley at the southern extremity of the mining district. It is well paved and lighted with gas, and is supplied with water conducted in pipes from the hills on its eastern side. The chief employment of the inhabitants is in connection with the mining and smelting of lead, but some are engaged in the manufacture of tape, gingham, silk, cotton, and stockings. There are extensive stone quarries, and spars, fluors, &c., and are found in great variety. Malting is also carried on. Petty sessions are held on the first and third Tuesdays in each month, and a county court sits monthly at the Moot Hall, rebuilt in 1814 by the Hon. Charles Bathurst, then chancellor of the duchy. In this hall is preserved the hoppet or standard brass dish of Henry VIII.'s time for measuring the ores, and in it are also held the barmote courts twice a year before the steward of the manor to determine all disputes and offences against the ancient customs as defined and amended by the Derbyshire Mining Customs and Mineral Courts Act, 1852. The code of laws and customs by which these courts are governed closely resemble those of the stanneries of Cornwall; one custom is, that every person has the privilege of digging and searching for lead ore in any part of the "King's Field," which comprehends the greater part of the wapentake, and should he discover a vein of lead, he has a right to work it, and erect buildings necessary for that purpose, without making any compensation to the owner of the land. A court of requests was established here in 1837 under a special Act of parliament. Two courts baron annually take place at Easter and Michaelmas, and a court leet at Easter for the king's manor, under the lessee of the crown. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are now the impropriators. There is also another manor within the parish, called the Holland or Richmond manor, which has no courts, but was granted in 1553 by Henry VIII. to Ralph Gell. The living is a vic.* in the archdeaconry of Derby and dioc. of Lichfield, val. £300, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The chancel was restored in 1855. In the interior are several old monuments of the Gells, Lowes, Hurts, and Wigleys, including an effigy of Anthony Gell, Esq., founder of the grammar school of almshouses, bearing date 1583. There are besides chapels of ease at Cromford, at Alderwasley, rebuilt in 1855, on the site of a former one of Henry VIII., and at Middleton, built in 1844, also a new district church at Idridgehay, erected in 1855. There are chapels for Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Baptists, in the town of Wirksworth, besides several in other parts of the parish. The free grammar school, founded by Anthony Gell in 1576, situated close to the churchyard, was rebuilt in 1828. It has an income from endowment of £160, and is attended by about 110 pupils, of whom 50 are admitted on the foundation, and the rest are subject to moderate quarterly charges for education. In connection with the school charity are Gell's almhouses, or hospital, for six almsmen, who receive 3*s.* 6*d.* a week, with other privileges. There are also several other schools in various parts of the parish, and a mechanics' institution at Wirksworth. An annual feast is kept for a week, commencing on the first Sunday after the 8th of September. Market day is Tuesday for corn and provisions. Fairs are held on Shrove and Easter Tuesdays, 12th May, 18th July, 8th September, and the third Tuesday in November, principally for cattle, the last being also a statute fair.

WIRRAL, a hund. in two divisions, higher and lower, lying between the Mersey and the Dee, co. Cheshire. The higher div. contains the pars. of Burton, Eastham, Neston, Shotwick, Stanlow, Great Stanney, Stoke, and parts of Backford, Bromborough, St. Mary-on-the-Hill, St. Oswald, and Holy Trinity; and the lower div. contains the pars. of Bebington, Bidstone, Birkenhead, Heswall, Thurstaston, Upton, Wallasey, Kirby West, Woodchurch, and part of Bromborough; comprising together 63,220 acres, with a population, in 1861, of 69,448. This place gives name to a Poor-law Union and to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of Chester.

WIRSWALL, a tnshp. in the par. of Whitchurch, co. Chester, 2 miles N. of Whitchurch.

WISBEACH, a hund. in the Isle of Ely lib., co. Cambridge, contains the pars. of Elm, Leverington, Newton, Outwell, Thorney, Tydd St. Giles, Upwell, Wisbeach, and Wisbeach St. Mary, comprising 70,790 acres.

WISBEACH, a par., seaport, municipal borough, and market town, in the hund. of the same name, Isle of Ely, co. Cambridge, 25 miles N. of Ely, and 40 from Cambridge. It is situated in the Fens, on the river Nene and Wisbeach canal, near the Norfolk border, and is connected by several branch lines of railway, with the Great Eastern and Midland lines. In the Saxon times it was called Wisebec, and was given by Osway in 1000 to Ely abbey. The Conqueror built a castle here in 1071, which was rebuilt by the bishops of Norwich, who made it their palace in the fifteenth century. On several occasions it has been inundated by the sea, and was shaken by an earthquake in 1750. It was first chartered by Edward VI., and was fortified by Cromwell. Under the Municipal Reform Act it is divided into the north and south wards, including part of Walsoken, and is governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, with the style of "burgesses of the borough of Wisbeach." The corporation revenue amounts to about £3,000 per annum. The spring and midsummer assizes for the liberty of the Isle of Ely are held here, and petty sessions for the hundred regularly by the county magistrates. It is a polling place for the county elections, and a seaport town, with custom-house and quays, capable of admitting vessels of 400 tons from Lynn Deeps. An iron bridge and wharves have recently been erected at a cost of about £60,000 to the town. The population of the municipal borough in 1861 was 9,276. It contains a shire hall or sessions house, erected in 1801; corn exchange, in 1811; house of correction for the Isle of Ely and borough of Wisbeach; a custom house, savings-bank, two branch banks, stamp office, theatre, library and reading-rooms, mechanics' institute, literary society, museum, union workhouse, baths, assembly rooms, gas and water works, and two cemeteries. There are besides, breweries, planing and saw mills, foundries, boat-building yards, mast and block works, rope-walks, a cooperage, tannery, cotton-reel manufactory, corn-mills, malt-houses, tobacco-pipe works, and brickfields. A considerable business is done in the shipping trade and in corn, timber and malt, no less than 250,000 quarters of grain having changed hands in a single year. Many hands are also engaged in boat-building and the repair of ships. It gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and dioc. of Ely. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £950, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, has recently been repaired at a cost of £4,500, and contains St. Martin's chantry, a canopied brass of Thomas De Braunstone, bearing date 1401, and monuments to the Southwells and N. Sandford, a benefactor of the town. The register commences in 1558. There is besides a chapel-of-ease, built in 1831. The Roman Catholics, Baptists, Wesleyans, Independents, Society of Friends, and Unitarians, have chapels. The free grammar school of Edward VI. was refounded out of an ancient guild of the fourteenth century, and stands on the site of the old townhall. It has a revenue from endowment of £100, besides several scholarships at Cambridge. Wright's schools have an endowment of £250, and Dr. Jobson's Sunday-schools one of £200. There are besides National, British, and infant schools. The charities, including the endowments of the schools and almshouses, produce £1,500 per annum. Wisbeach is the head of a Poor-law Union, new County Court district, and superintendent registry. Market day is on Saturday, chiefly for corn and malt, when occasionally 9,000 quarters of wheat have been sold. Fairs are held on the Saturday preceding Palm Sunday and Lady-Day for hemp, &c.; on the Thursday before Whit Sunday, and on 5th July for horses, and on 12th August for cattle.

WISBEACH ST. MARY, a par. in the hund. of Wisbeach, Isle of Ely, co. Cambridge, 3 miles S.W. of Wisbeach. It is a station on the Peterborough, Wisbeach, and Lynn branch of the Midland railway. The parish is situated near the Norfolk border, on the New Nene river, comprising the chplry. of Guyhirn, with the hmlts. of Murrow Wisbeach Fen, and Tholomas Drove. The living is a perpet cur. in the dioc. of Ely, with the cur. of Guyhirn annexed. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an old font, some curious brackets, and remains of the stoup. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Guyhirn, built in 1666. The register commences in 1560. The Independents have a chapel. The charities produce about £200 per annum, besides 15 almshouses, including the endowments of Hardy's charity school and Jobson's Sunday-school.

WITHAM, a div. of the hund. of Lexden, co. Essex, contains the pars. of Aldham, Chapel, Great Coggeshall, Earl's Colne, Eugain Colne, Wake's Colne, White Colne, Copford, Feering, Inworth, Markshall, Messing, Pattiswick, Tey Great and Little, and Mark's Tey, comprising 29,820 acres.

WITHAM, a hund. in co. Essex, contains the pars. of Bradwell, Great and Little Braxted, Little Coggeshall, Cressing, Fairsted, Faulkbourn, Hatfield-Peverell, Kelvedon, Black Notley, White Notley, Rivenhall, Terling, Ulting, Witham, and part of Great Leighs, comprising 37,830 acres.

WITHAM, a par. and market town in the hund. of the same name, co. Essex, 6 miles N. of Malden, 8 N.E. of Chelmsford, and 7 S.W. of Coggeshall. It is a junction station on the Great Eastern railway, where the branch line turns off for Braintree. Witham is situated near the confluence of the small stream called the Braine, or Podsbrook, with the Blackwater, and is the chief place of the hundred, to which it gives name. It is supposed to occupy the site of the Roman station Canonium, mentioned by Antonine, on the road from London to Colchester, and was rebuilt by Edward the Elder in 913, who fortified it against the Danes. The lordship of Witham was subsequently held by Earl Harold and, after the Conquest, by Eustace Earl of Boulogne, as part of the Honour of Bonanda. It received the grant of a market and fairs from Richard I., which were originally kept on Chipping Hill. The manor was given by Stephen to the Knights Templars, who had a preceptory at Cressing, about three miles distant, and on their suppression passed with their other possessions to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. The assizes were held here in 1568: petty sessions are still held every alternate Tuesday at the police station, and manorial courts occur as occasion requires for the four manors. The population of the parish in 1861 was 3,455. The town is paved and lighted with gas, and is under the charge of a board of health, established in 1852. It is the head of a Poor-law Union, comprising 17 parishes, and contains the union workhouse, built in 1838 at a cost of near £7,000. The other public buildings are a branch bank, savings-bank, lunatic asylum, police-station, and literary institution, with library of 800 volumes. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £473, and 103 acres of glebe, in the patron. of the bishop of Rochester. The original parish church of St. Nicholas, situated on Chipping Hill, near the double-ditched Roman camp, is a spacious structure of great antiquity, in the walls of which are many Roman bricks. It has been recently re-roofed. In the interior are many old monuments, with effigies of Judge Heathcote, and several painted windows. There is also a new church, dedicated to All Saints, erected in 1842 at a cost of £5,000. Roman Catholics, Independents, Wesleyans, Baptists, and Society of Friends have chapels. There are National, British, and infant schools. The charities produce about £300 per annum, including the endowment of several almshouses, known as Armond's, Bridge's, Harvey's, and Greene's. Market day is Tuesday, in the evening. Fairs are held on the Friday and Saturday in Whitsun week, 4th June, and 14th September.

WITHAM. See WYTHAM, co. Berks.

WITHAM, FRIARY, a par. in the E. div. of the hund. of Frome, co. Somerset, 5½ miles S.W. of Frome, its post town, 4 E. of Axbridge, and 14 from Wells. It is a station on the Wilts and Somerset section of the Great Western railway, where the East Somerset line turns off. The par. is situated on the river Frome, and contains the hmlts. of Gaer Hill, Bellerica, Holt, Rouse, Stubbs, and Drewley, besides the ext.-par. lib. of Charterhouse-on-Mendip, which last is in the hund. of Wintersoke. The soil is clayey, upon a substratum of soft limestone, which is burnt into lime, and in some places are found layers of hard stone with shells imbedded in it. There are remains of the mansion built about the middle of the 18th century by the Earl of Egremont, but destroyed by Mr. Beckford; and traces of a monastery founded by Henry II. in 1181, and said to be the first establishment of Carthusians in England. Its revenue at the time of the Reformation was returned at £227 1*s.* 8*d.*, and the ruins were taken down in 1764. There is a kiln for brick and tile burning. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £105. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, St. John the Baptist, and All Saints, once formed part of the Carthusian priory. It has a groined roof, a nave with circular apse, and a tower, which was added in 1828, and is in ill-keeping with the original structure. Being in a dilapidated state, the church was repaired in 1828, and a new organ erected by subscription in 1859. The register commences in 1615. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £30 per annum. The Duke of Somerset is lord of the manor, which was a peculiar prior to 1826.

WITHAM, NORTH, a par. in the wap. of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 2 miles S.W. of Colsterworth, 8 S. of Grantham, and 4½ S.W. of Corby railway station. The par., which includes the hmlt. of Lobthorpe, is situated in a valley watered by the river Witham, and a little W. of the Great North road. The surface is hilly, and the soil clayey. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £520. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains three modern painted windows, several monuments, and a brass of Roland Sherard, dated 1592, and bearing an inscription in Latin verse. The Earl of Dysart is lord of the manor.

WITHAM-ON-THE-HILL, a par. in the wap. of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 4 miles S.W. of Bourn, 7 N. of Stamford, and 5 N. of Essendine railway station. The village is situated on an eminence near the river Glen. The par. contains the hmlts. of Lound, Manthorpe, and Toft. The soil is of various descriptions, upon a substratum of oolite and freestone. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £107. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a free school, founded and endowed by James Thompson in 1719, for which a school-house has recently been built. The charities produce about £300 per annum, arising chiefly from the estate bequeathed for the support of the school and church. General W. A. Johnson is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WITHAM, SOUTH, a par. in the wap. of Beltisloe, parts of Kesteven, co. Lincoln, 3½ miles S. of Colsterworth, 10 S. of Grantham, and 6 S.W. of Corby railway station. The village is situated on the south-western border of the county at the river Witham's head. There are traces of a preceptory of Knights Templars, founded here in 1164, and which afterwards came into the hands of the Hospitallers. The surface is hilly and the soil clayey. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £225. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, contains several monuments and brasses, the earliest bearing date 1577. The Independents and Wesleyans have chapels. The charities produce about £5 per annum, which is distributed to the poor on St. Thomas's day. The Earl of Dysart is lord of the manor.

The soil is shellet and peat on a subsoil of rock. The living is a cur. annexed to the rect. of Hawkridge, in the dioc. of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew.

WITLEY, a par. in the second div. of Godalming hund., co. Surrey, 3½ miles S.W. of Godalming. It is a station on the London and South-Western railway. The village is situated on the road from Godalming to Petworth, and the direct line of railway to Portsmouth. The par. includes the chplry. of Milford. The land is elevated, and includes a considerable tract of common and woodland. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £100. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains a painted E. window, two brasses with Norman details, and monuments to the Chandler and Webb families. There is besides a chapel-of-ease at Milford, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, and parochial schools. Gold and silver coins have been discovered here.

WITLEY, GREAT, a par. in the lower div. of Doddingtree hund., co. Worcester, 5 miles S.W. of Stourport, and 10 N.W. of Worcester. The parish, which includes the hmlt. of Redmarley, is intersected by the roads from Worcester to Ludlow, and from Staffordshire into Herefordshire. An abundant supply of water is obtained from the Abberley and Woodbury hills, on the latter of which are traces of an ancient British encampment, also said to have been occupied by Owen Glendower in his war with Henry IV. Limestone is abundant, containing various descriptions of fossils, and some bivalves are found in the argillaceous stratum. Many of the women are employed in making gloves for the manufacturers of Worcester. It is a meet for the Worcestershire hounds. Petty sessions for the hundred are held on the last Thursday in each month. Queen Adelaide resided here in 1843. Witley Court, until recently the seat of the Foley family, who inherited the manor from the Cookseys and Russells, is now the property of Earl Dudley. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £400. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, was built in 1760 by the first Lord Foley, and is now undergoing restoration, at the cost of Earl Dudley. The interior contains a monument by Rysbrach to the first Lord Foley, and some frescoes; the windows, painted by Price in 1719, and the ceiling by Verrio, were brought from the chapel at Canons, when that mansion was taken down. The charities produce about £5 per annum. Abberley Lodge, once the residence of Walsh the poet and friend of Pope, is situated partly in this parish.

WITLEY, LITTLE, a chplry. in the par. of Holt, co. Worcester, 2 miles S.E. of Great Witley.

WITNESHAM, a par. in the hund. of Carlford, co. Suffolk, 4 miles N.E. of Ipswich, near the head of the Fynn, a branch of the river Deben. The soil is generally a stiff loam, with sand and clay pits in various parts. The Meadows family, ancestors of Earl Manvers, have had a seat here since the reign of Richard III. The rectory was once held by Bishop Latimer. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £500, in the patron. of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The register commences in 1531. The Baptists have a chapel. There are National schools. J. W. Woodham, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WITNEY, a par. and market town in the hund. of Bampton, co. Oxford, 6 miles W. of Bampton, and 11 N.W. of Oxford, with which it is connected by a short line of railway. The par., which is watered by the river Windrush, over which is a bridge of three arches, and traversed by the road from Cheltenham to Gloucester, comprises, besides the town of Witney, the chplries. of Crawley, Curbridge, and Hailey. It is a place of considerable antiquity, having been given by Bishop Ailwyn to Winchester Cathedral, and by Bishop de Blois to St. Cross. It sent members to parliament in the 33rd year of Edward I. and 5th Edward III., about which time a tournament was held here by Humphrey de Bohun and Aylmer de Valence. The market cross was built in 1683, by William Blake, Esq., of Coggs, and was repaired in 1811. The town consists chiefly of two streets, one above a mile in length. It contains a townhall, built over a piazza in which the market is held, a Blanket Hall, erected in 1721 for the transaction of business, but now used as a warehouse, two branch banks, and in the chapelry of Curbridge the union workhouse. The population in 1851 was 3,099, inhabiting 630 houses, and in 1861, 3,458, inhabiting 741 houses. The manufacture of blankets, duffels, or pilot cloths, and other woollen goods, for which the town has long been celebrated, still occupies a considerable number of hands, although it has somewhat declined since the introduction of machinery; tiltings, gloves, and woolstapling are also carried on, and a large trade is done in matting. The local affairs of the town are administered by two bailiffs, two constables, and other officers, chosen at the annual court leet held at Michaelmas, but the jurisdiction belongs to the county magistrates. A court baron is held twice a year by the Duke of Marlborough, as lessee of the manor under the Bishop of Winchester. The Poor-law Union comprises 42 parishes, of which one is in co. Berks, two in Gloucester, and the remainder in Oxford. It is also the seat of a new county court and superintendent registry. The river Windrush abounds in trout and crayfish. The living is a rect. and vic. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £1,000, in the patron. of the Bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has on the N. side a mortuary chapel of the Wenman family. It has within the past year been very handsomely restored at the cost of £4,000, including the restoration of the chancel, which was undertaken by the present rector, at a cost of £1,000. The designs were by Mr. Street. There is also a district church recently erected in Wood Green. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Society of Friends, have chapels. The free grammar school for 30 boys was founded and endowed in 1663, by Henry Box; the Blue-coat school in 1723, by John Holloway; and another school by William Blake in 1693; there are, besides, National and Sunday schools, and several almshouses. The charities, including the school endowments and Freeland's estate for the poor, produce about £650 per annum. Market day is on Thursday, and a cattle market is held on the last Thursday in every month. Fairs are held on Easter Tuesday, Holy Thursday, Thursdays following 9th July, 24th August, 8th September, 1st December, and the Thursday before 10th October for cattle and cheese.

The charities produce £20 per annum, being the rental of 25 acres. There are National and infant schools.

WITTER, a par. in the bar. of Ards, co. Down, Ireland, 2½ miles S.E. of Portaferry. The village is situated on the E. side of the entrance to Lough Strangford. On the eastern coast are Quintin, Millin, and Tara bays, and on the western that of Bar Hall, with the headland of Ballygrintin to the S. There are some remains of De Courcy's castle. The land is hilly, and generally fertile. The living is a vic. united to that of Inch.

WITTERING, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Manhood, rape of Chichester, co. Sussex, 7 miles S.W. of Chichester. The village is situated near the coast of the English Channel, which bounds the parish on the S. The sea has been encroaching upon this part of the coast, and has absorbed a considerable portion of the prebendal manor of Bracklesham. The sands, which are left dry at low water, are particularly firm and level, with patches of soft clay, in which fossil shells are found. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £200, in the patron. of the Bishop of London.

WITTERING, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Manhood, rape of Chichester, co. Sussex, 7½ miles S.W. of Chichester, and 2 N.W. of East Wittering. The village is bounded on the W. by Chichester Harbour, and on the S. by the British Channel. Here the Saxon chieftain Ella is supposed to have defeated the Britons in 477. The old episcopal palace of the bishops of Chichester, now called Cakeham Manor Place, has been converted into a farmhouse, and near it is the tower built by Bishop Sherborne. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £165, in the patron. of the bishop. The church contains a Norman font, and two monuments, with effigies of William Ernley and family. The register commences in 1622. There are National schools.

WITTERSHAM, a par. in the hund. of Oxney, lathe of Shepway, co. Kent, 5 miles S.E. of Tenterden, and 5 N. of Rye railway station. The village is situated on a plateau surrounded by the river Rother and its branches, forming, with the adjoining parishes of Ebony and Stone, the Isle of Oxney. There are hop-gardens and orchards. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £730, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are a literary institution, and a free school founded in 1820. The charities produce about £80 per annum, including the school endowment. A fair is held on the 12th May.

WITTON, a par. in the hund. of Blofield, co. Norfolk, 5 miles E. of Norwich, and 2 from the Brundall railway station. It is traversed by the road from Norwich to Yarmouth, and bounded on the S. by the navigable river Yare. The land is chiefly arable. The living is a rect. consolidated with that of Brundall. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, has been recently restored. The register commences in 1571.

WITTON, a par. in the hund. of Tunstead, and Tunstead and Happing incorporation, co. Norfolk, 4 miles N.E. of North Walsham, near the coast. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £136, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, was erected by the late Lord Wodehouse. In the interior are monuments to the Norris family, to whom the manor formerly belonged. There is a school, founded by Lady Wodehouse in 1834. The charities produce about £50 per annum. The register dates from 1558.

WITTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Aston, co. Warwick, 3 miles N. of Birmingham, near the Grand Junction canal.

WITTON, a par. in the hund. of Hurstingstone, co. Hunts, 2 miles N.W. of St. Ives, and 3½ E. of Huntingdon. The village is situated on the river Ouse, which passes through the parish. It was for some years the residence of Horne Tooke, and Charles James Fox was married here in September, 1795. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ely, val. with the rect. of Houghton, £650. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret or to All Saints. There is a National school.

WITTON, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. and borough of Blackburn, co. Lancaster, 2 miles N.W. of Blackburn. It is situated on the river Darwen and Liverpool canal.

WITTON, EAST, a par. in the wap. of West Hang, North Riding co. York, 2 miles S.E. of Middleham, 4 S.E. of Leyburn, and 10 S.W. of Bedale. The village is situated near the confluence of the rivers Cover and Ure. The par. comprises the tnshps. of Witton Within and Witton Without, including the hmlts. of Colsterdale, Cover Bridge, where is an extensive brewery, Newstead, Jerveaux Abbey, and Kilgram Bridge. The soil is generally light, consisting of sand and gravel. At Braithwaite is a lead mine, and in the neighbourhood are quarries of excellent freestone well adapted for grindstones. About a mile E. of the village are the ruins of Jerveaux Abbey, founded in 1141, in honour of the Virgin Mary, which at the Dissolution had a revenue of £455 10*s.* 5*d.* These remains, having been cleared from rubbish at the commencement of the present century—when a tesselated pavement was uncovered, but which has since perished by exposure to the air—are now surrounded by a wall and sunk fence. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £100. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist or to St. Ella, was built in 1812, at the expense of the late Earl of Aylesbury, in commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the accession of George III. Divine service is also performed at the schoolhouse in Colsterdale. There are schools for boys and girls, erected and partially endowed by the Marquis of Aylesbury, in 1817. The charities produce about £20 per annum. Fairs are held on the 3rd May and 20th November for cattle and sheep. The Marquis of Aylesbury is lord of the manor.

WITTON-GILBERT, a par. and tnshp. in the W. div. of Chester ward, co. Durham, 3 miles N.W. of Durham, and 4½ S.W. of Chester-le-Street. It is situated in a sheltered valley on the road from Durham to Lanchester, near the river Wear and the Lanchester Valley railway, on which it is a station. The par. contains the collieries of Findon Hill, Sacristan, and Charlaw. At an early period Gilbert De la Ley founded here a hospital for five lepers, the only fragment of which is a pointed window in a farmhouse occupying its site. The par. includes the hmlts. of Edmonsley, Fulforth, Finden Hill, Kimblesworth, and Sacristan, chiefly inhabited by colliers. About 1,083 acres are church land tithe-free. The chief landowners are the Dean and Chapter of Durham, the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the University of Durham, and the Earl of Durham. Bear Park is now in ruins. The soil is generally light, consisting of sand and gravel. The living is both a rect. and perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £332, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. The register commences in 1570. Divine service is also performed at the schoolhouse at Sacristan. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and United Free Methodists, have chapels both at Witton and Sacristan. There are two National schools, and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £5 per annum, exclusive of the school endowment.

WITTON-LE-WEAR, a par. chplry. in the hund. of Darlington, co. Durham, 4 miles N.W. of Bishop Auckland, and 12 from Durham, and is a junction station on the North-Eastern railway. The village occupies a site on the southern acclivity of a hill rising from the N. bank of the river Wear, which is here crossed by a bridge. On the river is Witton Castle, originally built by the Lords de Eure about 1410, and during the civil war of Charles I. held by Sir William D'Arcy, for the king, till besieged and taken by the parliamentarians under Sir Arthur Haslerigg. The castle, having been subsequently burnt, was rebuilt. The par. chplry. comprises the tnshps. of Witton-le-Wear and North Bedburn, with the hmlts. of Howden and Witton Park, at which last place are extensive ironworks. Coal is extensively worked, giving employment to the greater part of the population. The Raby hounds meet here. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Durham, val. £100. The church is dedicated to SS. Philip and James. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel at Witton, and the Wesleyans one at Howden. There are schools for boys and girls at Witton, and a colliery school at Howden. The Bishop of Durham is lord of the manor.

WITTON, LONG. See LONG WITTON, co. Northumberland.

WITTON, NETHER, a par. chplry. in the W. div. of Morpeth ward, co. Northumberland, 8 miles N.W. of Morpeth, its post town, and 3 N.E. of Hartburn. The village is situated at the confluence of the river Font and the Ewesleybourn. The par. includes the tnshps. of Coat-Yards, Ewesley, Healey, and Comb-Hill, Nether Witton, Nunnykirk, Ritton, and Colt Park. There is a woollen manufactory of small extent. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £150, in the patron. of the Vicar of Hartburn. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. WITTON, WEST, a par. in the wap. of West Hang, North Riding co. York, 4½ miles W. of Middleham. The village is situated on the northern slope of Penhill in Wensleydale, near the river Ure, or Yore. The par. includes the hmlt. of Swinethwaite, and the vestiges of an ancient castle, once belonging to Ralph Fitz-Randal. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £105. The church is supposed to have been built in the reign of Henry I. The Roman Catholics and Wesleyans have chapels. There is a National school. The charities produce about £30 per annum.

WITTON-WITH-TWAMBROOKS, a tnshp. and par. chplry. in the par. of Great Budworth, hund. of Northwich, co. Chester, a quarter of a mile E. of Northwich, of which it forms a suburb.

WIVELISCOMBE, a par. and market town in the hund. of Kingsbury West, co. Somerset, 15 miles S.W. of Bridgwater, 11 W. of Taunton, and 6 N. of Wellington railway station. It is situated in a comb, or valley, from which circumstance it takes its name, under the Maundown hills, and includes the chplry. of Fitzhead, the town of Wiveliscombe, and the hmlts. of Croford, Ford, Langley, West Town, and Whitfield. It was a place of importance under the Saxons, and had a palace in the 15th century, belonging to the Bishops of Wells, to whom the manor was originally given by Edward the Confessor. It is a polling place for the county elections, and is governed by a bailiff, portreeve, and other officers, but is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions on the third Tuesday in each month. The population is close upon 3,000. The town is lighted with gas, and contains a townhall, police station, dispensary, reading-rooms, and branch bank. Here is situated the largest brewery in the W. of England. In the western part of the parish the underlying rock is slate, which is extensively quarried, and in the E. and S. Red sandstone. The soil is a mixture of Red sandstone and shillet. The land produces good crops of wheat and barley. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £480, in the patron. of the prebendary of Wiveliscombe in Wells cathedral. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was rebuilt in 1829. The register commences in 1536. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels. There are National, infant, and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £90 per annum. There are 8 almshouses, besides 19 cottages bequeathed by Jerome Brooks for reduced ratepayers. At Courtneys in this parish are traces of a Roman camp, and at Castle Hill of a Saxon one, near which Roman coins have been found. The market day is on Tuesday. Fairs are held on the 12th May and 25th September for cattle and sheep, and on the last Tuesdays of February and July. Lord Ashburton is lord of the manor.

WIVELSFIELD, a par. partly in the hund. of Street, rape of Lewes, and partly in that of Burley Arches, rape of Pevensey, co. Sussex, 4 miles S.E. of Cuckfield, and 2 N. of Burgess Hill station on the London and Brighton railway. The village is situated on an elevated spot nearly in the centre of the county, and contains the Sussex county Lunatic Asylum, erected in 1859 at a cost of £50,000. The asylum, which has a chapel annexed, is situated on Hayward's Heath, a short distance from the village, and about a mile S. of the Hayward's Heath railway station. It contains about 450 patients. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £95. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. The register commences in 1633. The Independents and Baptists have chapels.

WIVENHOE, a par. and small town in the hund. of Lexden, co. Essex, 4 miles S.E. of Colchester, of which it is the port. It is a station on the Tendring branch of the Great Eastern railway. The town is built at the confluence of the rivers Roman and Colne, and forms, with Brightlingsea and Rowhedge, a part of the port of Sandwich. There is a spacious quay where the larger vessels discharge their cargoes for Colchester. The greater portion of the male population are employed in the oyster and other fisheries, and as pilots. At the time of the Domesday survey the manor was held by Robert Gernon, as part of the manor of Stanstead Mountfitchet, and came through the De Batailes, Suttons, and others, to the De Veres, Earls of Oxford, and subsequently to Roger Townsend. The manor now belongs to the Corsellis family, of Benson, in Oxfordshire. The principal seats are Wivenhoe Park and the Hall. Boat-building and ship-building are carried on. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £400. The church is dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin. The register commences in 1566. An extramural cemetery was opened in 1858. A fair is held on the 4th of September.

WIVERTON HALL, an ext. par. place in the hund. of Bingham, co. Notts, 2 miles S. of Bingham, and 12 S.E. of Nottingham, on the river Smite, near the borders of Leicestershire.

WIVETON, a par. in the hund. of Holt, co. Norfolk, 4½ miles N.W. of Holt, and half a mile S.W. of Cley. The village is situated near the coast of the North Sea. The land is chiefly arable, with some woodland and heath. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £207. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The register commences in 1717. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £250 per annum, principally the bequest of Ralph Greenaway in 1529.

WOBURN, a par. and market town in the hund. of Manshead, co. Beds, 15 miles S.W. of Bedford, and 7 N. of Leighton-Buzzard. At Woburn sands is a station on the Bletchley branch of the London and North-Western railway. The town occupies an eminence on the London and Leeds road. It has twice been nearly destroyed by fire, once in the 16th and again in the 18th centuries, and consists of four broad streets nearly a quarter of a mile long, well paved and lighted. Near the centre of the town, at the intersection of Leighton and Park Streets, stand the townhall and market house, erected by the late Duke of Bedford in 1830, and adjoining is a fountain, or reservoir, for supplying water in case of fire, constructed at the expense of the Duke of Bedford. The ducal seat, Woburn Abbey, was originally founded in 1145 by Hugh de Bolebec for monks of the Cistercian order, but was given by Edward VI. in 1549, with a great part of the lands, to John, first Earl of Bedford. In the middle of the last century it was almost entirely rebuilt by Flitcroft, and has since undergone considerable alterations and enlargements. The principal state-rooms are in the W. front, which is of the Ionic order, and is approached from London by a façade with Ionic three-quarter columns, surmounted by the ducal arms and crest. The library is 56 feet by 23; and the sculpture gallery, formed by the late Duke, 138 feet by 25, contains the group of the Graces by Canova, the Lanti, or Bedford vase, 13 Etruscan vases, and some of the finest works of Chantrey, Westmacott, and Thorwalsden, besides many specimens of ancient sculpture, a collection of paintings by the great masters, and upwards of 300 portraits. The park-farm, belonging to the abbey, is a school of scientific agriculture. There is a literary and scientific institution, which holds its meetings at the townhall. Petty sessions for the hundred of Manshead are held weekly. The Poor-law Union of Woburn comprises 16 parishes, which form a separate superintendent registry, but are included in the Leighton-Buzzard new county-court district. The living is a don. cur., val. £250. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, and built by Abbot Hobbs, whom Henry VIII. hanged on a low pollard, still standing in the park, and known as Abbot's oak, was pulled down three years ago, and a cemetery chapel erected on the site. A new church, now (1868) nearly completed, has been built, at the cost of the present Duke, on a site nearer the abbey. There are chapels for Independents and Wesleyans, and a free school for boys, founded in 1582 by Francis, second Earl of Bedford; a similar school for girls, founded by the late Duke in 1825, and 12 almshouses for 24 widows, founded and endowed by John, fourth Duke of Bedford in 1672. Market day is on Friday. Fairs are held on 1st January, 23rd March, 13th July, and 6th October.

WOKING, a par. and market town in the first div. of Woking hund., co. Surrey, 3 miles N.W. of Ripley, and 5 N.E. of Guildford. It is a station on the London and South-Western railway, which here sends off a branch to Guildford and Portsmouth. The par., containing the market town of Woking, with Goldsworth, Kingfield, Heathside, Sutton, and 5 other tythgs. In the Saxon times it formed part of the royal demesne, but was afforested in 1154 by Henry II., whose successor gave it to Alan, Lord Bassett, from whom it came to the Despencers, and on their attainder was given by Edward III. to Edmund of Woodstock. The manor was given by James I. to Sir E. Zouch, who pulled down the old palace to build Hoe Bridge Place with the materials. About two miles down the river Wey are the ruins of Newark Abbey. The town stands on an acclivity near the London road, and on the western bank of the river Wey. There are a brewery, malt-house, and paper mills, and at Knap Hill is a convict prison recently built, and a retreat for decayed actors. In 1854 a metropolitan cemetery was opened here. In this parish stands Sutton Place, built by Sir Richard Weston about 1530; and Sutton House, once visited by Queen Elizabeth, to which is attached a Roman Catholic chapel, where service is performed. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £234. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, contains a font, two brasses, and a mural monument to Sir J. Zouch. There are National and Sunday schools. A fair is held on Whit-Tuesday.

WOKINGHAM, or OAKINGHAM, a par. and market town in the hunds. of Sonning and Amesbury, co. Berks, 7 miles S.E. of Reading, 14 from Windsor, and 5½ from the Twyford station of the Great Western railway. It is a junction station on the Reading branch of the London and South-Western and London and South-Eastern railways. The town is situated within the bounds of Windsor Forest, on the borders of Wiltshire. It consists of four principal streets, at the intersection of which stands the old market-house and townhall, where the forest courts are held. Manor courts are also held, and the corporation holds a court of sessions in April and October. Petty sessions are held on the first and third Tuesdays in each month. The town is governed by an alderman, 7 burgesses, and a high steward. It is a polling place for the county elections, and the head of a Poor-law Union comprising 16 parishes, of which one is in Wilts, and the remaining 15 in Berks, but the poor-house is situated in the parish of Wargrave. It also gives name to a superintendent registry, but belongs to the Reading New County Court district. The population of the parish in 1861 was 4,144, and of the town, 2,404. A considerable business is done in the malt trade, and some of the inhabitants are employed in the silk, gauze, and shoe manufactures. In the vicinity large lumps of iron ore are found, called "ferrils." The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £150, of which £50 only is allowed by the Dean of Salisbury, who is impropriator of the rectorial tithes, producing £1,700, besides 30 acres of glebe. The church, dedicated to All Saints, has a clerestory and a carved oak ceiling. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels, and there are National, British, and infant schools. The parochial charities produce about £450 per annum, including £60 by Archbishop Laud for the poor. Market day is on Tuesday for corn and poultry. Fairs are held on 11th October and 2nd November for cattle.

WOLSINGHAM, a par. and market town in the north-western div. of Darlington ward, co. Durham, 16 miles S.W. of Durham, and 23 from Newcastle. It is a station on the Wear Valley branch of the North-Eastern railway. The par. comprises the chplry. of Thornley St. Bartholomew, including Towham, Tow Low, and the constabularies of Wolsingham, East, South, and Park Quarters. The town, which is irregularly built, is situated on the Lobley-Hill road, between Durham and Stanhope, at the point where the Weserow, or Waskerley stream, joins the Wear, here crossed by a stone bridge of one arch. The streets are well paved and lighted, and some of the houses are superior. The townhall, situated in the market-place, was built in 1824, but subsequently enlarged. There are also a police station, post-office, and railway station—the last on the other side of the Wear bridge. The manufacture of woollen cloth, edge-tools, and agricultural implements is carried on, and many of the inhabitants are employed in the neighbouring coal, lead, iron, and limestone works. The Sunnyside lead and ironstone mines are situated on the S. bank of the river Wear; and since they were leased to Colonel Deering & Co., in 1856, have been greatly developed by the company, which is on the cost-book system, and is divided into 6,000 shares. At Holywell is a strong chalybeate spring, and at Bradley Hall a sulphur spring. The county magistrates hold petty sessions for the division every Tuesday, and a county court once a month. A court leet and baron is also held twice a-year under the Bishop of Durham, as lord of the manor. In the Upper Town are remains of Pudsey Palace. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Durham, gross val. £1,200, net income £800, in the patron. of the Bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, was rebuilt in 1848, with the exception of the tower. The register commences in 1655. The Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Particular Baptists have chapels. The grammar school, founded in 1613, was rebuilt in 1786. The endowments, bequests, and charities produce together about £175 per annum. Market day is on Tuesday for corn, &c. Fairs are held on the Tuesdays preceding the 1st and 31st March, 15th September, 2nd and 29th October, 23rd November, and on the 1st October—the last being for cattle, and statute fairs for pedlery and hiring servants on the 12th May and 21st September.

WOLSTANTON, a par. in the N. div. of Pirehill hund., co. Stafford, 1½ mile N.E. of Newcastle-under-Lyme, and 1 mile from the Longport station of the North Staffordshire railway. It is situated in the heart of the potteries, adjoining Burslem, and is intersected by the Grand Trunk canal. It contains the tnshps. and vils. of Brieryhurst, Chatterley, Chell, where is situated the Union workhouse, Wolstanton and Burslem, Chesterton, Knutton, Oldcott, Ranscliff, Stadmoreslow, Thursfield, Tunstall, and Wedgewood, with the chplries. or ecclesiastical districts of Chesterton, Kidsgrove, Golden Hill, Mow-Cop, and New Chapel, besides numerous small hmlts. The district abounds in clay, lime, coal, and ironstone. There are numerous factories of china, pottery, and earthenware, brick and tile yards, iron and steel works, engine works, cotton and silk mills. The population, which has nearly doubled in the last twenty years, was in 1861, for the whole parish 32,029, and for the township 1,842. The manor belongs to the duchy of Lancaster. The living, formerly a rect., is now a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £450. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, contains monuments to the Sneyd family, to whom the great tithes were conveyed by Edward VI. The register commences in 1628. At Thursfield is a Latin and English free school, founded by Dr. R. Hulme, with an income of £90 per annum, and National and other schools in connection with the several places of worship. The North Staffordshire hounds are kennelled at the Beeches in this parish. It is the seat of a Superintendent Registry and of a Poor-law Union, embracing the pars. of Wolstanton and Burslem, but is divided between the Hanley and Newcastle New County Court districts.

WOLSTON, a par. and tnshp. partly in the Kirby, but chiefly in the Rugby, div. of Knightlow hund., co. Warwick, 5½ miles S.E. of Coventry, 6 W. of Rugby, and 1 mile from the Brandon station of the London and North-Western railway, which here crosses the valley of the Avon. The village is situated on the S. bank of the river Avon. The par. includes the hmlts. of Brandon, where are some silk mills, Bretford, and Marston, and a farm called the Priory, formerly an alien cell to St. Peters-super-Dinan, in Normandy, but given to Coventry Priory by Richard II. The principal residences are Wolston Manorhouse, Heath Cottage, and Brandon Lodge. On the S. bank of the Avon are vestiges of Brandon Castle, supposed to have been built shortly after the Norman Conquest by Geoffrey de Clinton. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £500. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, was repaired in 1860. The register dates from 1558. The Baptists have a chapel. At Wolston are National schools, built by subscription in 1858, and at Brandon is an infant school, supported by Mrs. Beech. The charities produce about £35 per annum. J. Beach, Esq., is lord of the manor of Brandon.

WOLSTONE, a chplry. in the par. of Uffington, co. Berks, 5 miles S.E. of Great Farringdon.

WOLTERTON, a par. in the S. div. of Erpingham hund., co. Norfolk, 4 miles N.W. of Aylsham, near the river Bure. The principal residence is the Hall, the seat of the Earl of Orford, which was rebuilt by Ripley, for Horace Walpole, and which contains a collection of paintings, including Rubens's rainbow landscape. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with that of Wickmere, £500. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is in ruins.

WOLVERDINGTON. See WOLVERTON, co. Warwick.

WOLVERHAMPTON, a par., market, and union town, parliamentary and municipal borough in the hunds. of Seisdon, Cuttleston, and Offlow, co. Stafford, 16 miles S. of Stafford, and 12¾ N.W. of Birmingham. It is the largest town in Staffordshire, situated on an eminence, and almost encompassed by canals, and provided with ample railway communication to all parts of the country. It has two direct lines to London—125¾ miles by the London and North-Western, and 141½ by the Great Western. The Birmingham and Liverpool canal passes through the town, and also the Staffordshire and Worcestershire, and the Wyrley and Essington canals. Wolverhampton is mainly indebted for its rapid rise and great prosperity to the mineral wealth in its immediate vicinity. The geological strata on which it stands are limestone, ironstone, and coal-beds of various thickness. To the S. and E. the iron and coal mines extend as far as Birmingham, and beyond Walsall and Dudley, over what is termed the "black country." It is estimated that ironstone to the amount of 1,000,000 tons is annually raised from the South Staffordshire mines, that about 600,000 tons are imported, and that 160 furnaces are engaged in extracting the ore. The annual make of finished iron is about 850,000 tons, the produce of 2,100 puddling furnaces. The country on the N. and W. of the town affords many fine views—the Wrekin and Stafford Castle forming conspicuous objects—and is devoted to agriculture, the soil being rich and fertile. The par. of Wolverhampton comprises the tnshps. of Bilston, Bentley, Featherstone, Hatherton, Hilton, Kinvaston, Pelsall, Wednesfield, Willenhall, and Wolverhampton. The area of the parish is 16,680 acres; the population, according to the census of 1861, is 113,832. The area of the township is 3,008 acres, and the population 60,860, an increase of 10,875 since the census of 1851. The number of inhabited houses in the township is 11,770, and uninhabited 1,069. The parliamentary borough includes Bilston, Sedgley, Wednesfield, and Willenhall. The borough was formed on the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, and returns two members. Wolverhampton received its charter of incorporation in 1848, and is governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 36 councillors. The borough consists of 8 wards, and the council hold their meetings at the townhall. The name of the town is a corruption of Wulfrunas Hantune. Its original name was Hantune, or Hampton. Wulfrunas was added to it in the year 996, in honour of Wulfruna, sister of King Ethelred and wife of Aethelm, Duke of Northampton, who founded at Hampton a college for a dean and several prebendaries; she also endowed the town with many privileges. The market-place, a triangular area of considerable extent, with an equestrian statue of Prince Albert, by Thorneycroft, in the middle, is in the centre of the town, and the streets diverging from it take their names, in most cases, from the roads in which they terminate. The streets are clean, well-paved, and lighted with gas; the houses substantial and well-built, and the shops large and well-furnished. There are two large railway stations in the town. The London and North-Western (or high level station) is situated at the bottom of Queen-street. The Great Western (or low-level station) is situated close to, and to the N.E. of the high-level station, with which it has communication by a covered footway. This station is the joint design of the late Sir I. K. Brunel and John Fowler, Esq. There are several public buildings and institutions in the town. The market hall, in North-street, opened in 1853, is a large building of brick and stone, erected at a cost of £30,000. The interior is divided into three compartments, each 100 feet in length; the centre compartment being 33 feet, and each of the two side ones 26 feet wide. The townhall, in North-street, has a stone front of Italian design, with the borough arms sculptured in the tympanum of the pediment. The corn exchange, adjoining the market-place, has a principal room of 100 feet in length, and 50 in height; it contains a reading-room and law library, and was completed in 1853, at a cost of £10,000. The free grammar school in St. John-street was founded in 1515; the present building was erected in 1785. Abernethy and Sir W. Congreve were educated there. The Bluecoat school, in Berry-street, was founded early in the 18th century, and is supported mainly by voluntary contributions; 50 boys and 30 girls are educated and clothed by the charity, and 20 of the above are also maintained. The Union workhouse is a large structure in Bilston-road, and was erected in 1838 at a cost of £9,000. The South Staffordshire hospital, in the Cleveland-road, cost upwards of £15,000, and provides accommodation for upwards of 100 inmates. About a mile from the town, on Goldthorn Hill, Penn-road, stands the Wolverhampton orphan asylum. The institution was founded in 1850, and the present building, which has accommodation for 100 boys and 100 girls, was completed in 1863 at a total cost of £18,000. The charity is mainly supported by voluntary contributions. The Agricultural Hall, Snow Hill, erected in 1863 by a limited company, is chiefly used for the exhibition of agricultural implements; the large room is 160 feet by 60. The Athenæum, post-office, and county-court are in Queen-street; the police-station in Garrick-street; the theatre, which is only occasionally open, in Cleveland-road; the waterworks office in Worcester-street; the gasworks in Horseley-field; the cattle and hay market in Cleveland-road; the pig market in Bilston-street; and the hide and skin market in Salop-street. There are National schools attached to all the churches, as well as a ragged-school in Salop-street, and British, Congregational, Wesleyan, and Roman Catholic schools. The Establishment has nine churches in Wolverhampton. St. Peter's (formerly the collegiate church) is a rectory. The church is cruciform, the tower lofty, and divided into three stories. In the nave is a stone pulpit, ornamented with tabernacle work. The old building has been almost wholly reconstructed, at an outlay of upwards of £12,000. The new chancel was reopened September 26, 1865. In the transepts are monuments to the Levesons and Lanes; there is also an erect brass figure, in the S. transept, of Sir Richard Leveson, a rear-admiral in the reign of Elizabeth. The organ is placed above the intersection of the nave and transepts. There are several good stained glass windows in the chancel. In the church-yard is an ancient pillar. The patron of the rectory, which is £700 in value, is the bishop of the diocese. St. George's, on the Bilston-road, val. £300, patron the bishop, is a Doric structure. St. Paul's, Worcester-road, val. £300, is in the pointed style. St. Mark's, Tettenhall-road, and St. Matthew's, Walsall-road, val. each £300, are in the early English style, and are both in the gift of the crown and bishop alternately. St. John's, val. £300, is a Grecian building with tower and spire. St. James's, val. £225, and St. Luke's, val. £150, are in the gift of trustees. St. Mary's is val. £300. The parish of Wolverhampton is in the dioc. of Lichfield and the archdeaconry of Stafford. The Dissenting places of worship are numerous, the Independents, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, New Connexion and Free Church Methodists, Baptists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, having chapels. To almost all the churches and chapels Sunday-schools are attached. There is a synagogue in Fryer-street. The Independent chapel, on Snow-hill, is in the early English style, and a congregational chapel has just been rebuilt in Queen-street. The Roman Catholic chapel on Snow-hill is in the decorated style, with large schools adjoining. The Catholic Apostolic Church have a small stone chapel with tower, on Snow-hill. Wolverhampton is well supplied with water, partly by deep wells sunk in the rock on which the town stands, but mainly by a company established in 1845, which draws its supplies from the red-sandstone springs at Tettenhall and Goldthorn Hill; this water is soft and pure. Wolverhampton is famous for its hardware manufactures. Extensive ironworks, smelting furnaces, and foundries, are in the immediate neighbourhood, so that iron is produced in the town from the ore to the most polished perfection. Quarterly meetings of the iron-masters are held here. Tin and iron japanned wares, and articles in papier-mâché, are extensively produced in the town. There are also numerous chemical works, varnish, grease, colour, and dye works, corn mills, rope-walks, cooperages, saw-mills, coach and carriage manufactories, and agricultural implement works, crate works, and clay retort works. There is a large cemetery about a mile from the town. Wolverhampton has a stipendiary magistrate, and the borough court sits daily at the public office, Garrick-street. A county-court is held here. Wolverhampton is within the jurisdiction of the Birmingham bankruptcy court. There is a local police force; a coroner and deputy-coroner. The corporation fire-engine station is in Police-street, and several of the Fire Insurance offices have engines. There are several private and joint-stock banks, and most of the Fire and Life Insurance offices are represented. Two weekly papers are published at Wolverhampton, the Chronicle and the Express. The market days are Wednesday for cattle and corn, and Saturday for meat, vegetables, &c. The annual fair is held on the 10th of July and following days; it may be continued for eight days, but usually lasts only three or four. The Wolverhampton races are held on the Tuesday and Wednesday nearest to the 12th of August.

WOLVERLEY, a par. partly in the upper div. of Halfshire hund., but chiefly in the lower div., and forming a detached portion of the lower div. of Oswaldslow hund., co. Worcester, 2 miles N.W. of Kidderminster. The village is situated on the eastern bank of the navigable river Stour, and near the Stourbridge canal. The par. includes the vil. of Cookley, where are extensive works for the manufacture of iron, tin plates, screws, and iron wire; and the hmlts. of Blakeshall, Kingsford, and Horsley, with other small places. The surface is diversified, and the soil is light, resting upon red sandstone. On Blakeshall common is a pillar in memory of Richard Baxter. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £300, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There is also a church at Cookley, dedicated to St. Peter. The Wesleyans have a chapel and schools at Cookley. The free grammar school, founded by William Seabright in 1620, was rebuilt in 1829, and is endowed with property in and near London; there are also infant schools at Wolverley and Cookley. The charities, including the school endowment, produce about £700 per annum. Baskerville, the eminent printer, was born here in 1706.

WOLVERLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Wem, co. Salop, 10 miles N. of Shrewsbury.

WOLVERSHILL, a hmlt. in the par. of Bulkington, co. Warwick, 4 miles S.E. of Nuneaton.

WOLVERTON, a par. in the hund. of Newport, co. Bucks, 1 mile N.E. of Stony-Stratford, and 52½ miles from London. It is a station on the London and North-Western railway, which is carried across the Ouse by a viaduct 660 feet long, and has here its central locomotive dépôt. The village, which is situated nearly half way between London and Birmingham, on the Grand Junction canal and river Ouse, near the line of the ancient Watling Street, has recently grown into a considerable town, owing to the erection of large workshops, foundries, and factories for the repairs of the locomotive engines and carriages, which afford employment to a great number of hands. The population in 1861 was 2,370, and that of the ecclesiastical district of St. George, 1,793. The Whaddon Chase hounds meet here. The living of Holy Trinity is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £40; and that of St. George, a perpet. cur., val. £150. There are schools on the British and Foreign system, supported by the railway company; also reading rooms and market for the use of railway officials. The trustees of the late Dr. Radcliffe are lords of the manor.

WOLVERTON, a par. in the lower div. of Kingsclere hund., co. Hants, 1½ mile E. of Kingsclere. The village is situated on the road from Basingstoke to Kingclere. The soil is generally clayey, on a substratum of chalk and loam; but in some parts it is wet and sandy. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £300. The church is dedicated to St. Catherine. The charities produce £20 per annum.

WOLVERTON, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge-Lynn, co. Norfolk, 7 miles N.E. of Lynn, and 2 N. of Castle Rising, near the Wash, and a little to the W. of the road from Lynn to Wells. The land is principally in pasture, meadow, and salt-marsh, with a large tract of heath and warren. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was built about 1485, and has been recently repaired. The Hon. Charles Spencer Cowper is lord of the manor and sole landowner.

WOLVERTON, a par. in the hund. of Barlichway, co. Warwick, 4½ miles N.E. of Stratford-on-Avon, and 6 S.W. of Warwick. The village is situated in the vale of the Avon. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £300. The church is dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin.

WOLVESLEY CASTLE, an ext. par. place in the city of Winchester, co. Hants. It belongs to the bishops of Winchester, and comprises a portion of Henry de Blois' castle, built in 1138; a chapel of the time of Henry VII., and the palace built by Wren for Bishop Morley.

WOLVES-NEWTON, see NEWTON-WOLVES, co. Monmouth.

WOLVEY, a par. in the hund. of Knightlow, co. Warwick, 8 miles N.E. of Coventry, 5 S.E. of Nuneaton, and 4 from Hinckley. The village, which is partly inhabited by ribbon weavers, is situated near the river Anker. The par. includes the hmlts. of Bramcott, Copson, and Smokington, which last was formerly a considerable village on the line of the ancient Watling Street. On Wolvey Heath was a hermitage, founded in the reign of Richard II., and here Edward IV. was surprised by the Earl of Warwick, who conveyed him hence to Middleham castle, in Yorkshire. The great tithes belong to the prebendary of Wolvey, in the cathedral of Lichfield. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £206, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, contains an old monument to the Clinton family. The General Baptists have a chapel. There is a free school.

WOLVEY-HILLS and WOLVEY-HOLES, two ext. par. places adjoining the par. of Witcham, co. Cambridge, 3 miles S.W. of Ely.

WOLVISTON, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Billingham, co. Durham, 5 miles N.E. of Stockton.

WOMASTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Old Radnor, co. Radnor, 4 miles E. of Radnor. It is joined to Walton.

WOMBOURN, a par. in the S. div. of Seisdon hund., co. Stafford, 5 miles N.W. of Dudley, 4 S.W. of Wolverhampton, and 4 N. of Brierley Hill. The parish is intersected by the Staffordshire and Worcestershire canal, and is divided into three liberties, called Orton, Swindon, and Wombourn, with Woodford Grange extra parochial. The population in 1861 was 2,236. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. with Trysull annexed, £608, in the patron. of trustees. The church, dedicated to St. Benedict, contains a monument by Chantrey to the Marsh family. The Independents and Methodists of the New Connexion have chapels, and the Wesleyans one at Swindon. The charities produce about £5 per annum.

WOMBRIDGE, a par. in the Wellington div. of South Bradford hund., co. Salop, 3 miles E. of Wellington, 13 N.W. of Shrewsbury, and half a mile from Oakengates railway station. The parish is intersected by several canals and railways, and abounds in ironstone and coal, which have been worked from an early period. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the collieries and ironworks at Ketley, the latter turning out vast quantities of merchant bars, guide-iron, and wire-rods. The surface is hilly, and the soil dry and sandy, alternated with stiff clay. There are slight remains of a priory of Black canons, founded by William Fitzalan, of Clun, in the reign of Henry I., and which, at the Dissolution, had a revenue of £72 15*s.* 8*d.* The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £85. The church, dedicated to SS. Mary and Leonard, was rebuilt about 1760 on the site of an older structure, which was blown down by a storm in 1756, and has been recently enlarged. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National schools for both sexes near Oakengates, part of which village is in this parish. The Duke of Sutherland and St. John C. Charlton, Esq., are lords of the manor and chief landowners.

WOMBWELL, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. of Darfield, wap. of Strafforth, West Riding co. York, 4 miles S.E. of Barnsley. It is intersected by the Dearne and Dove canals, and the South Yorkshire railway, which has a junction station here where the Barnsley branch turns off. It contains the hmlt. of Hemingfield.

WOMENSWOULD, a par. in the hund. of Wingham, lathe of St. Augustine, co. Kent, 6 miles S.E. of Canterbury. The village is situated in an open district among the downs. The London, Dover, and Chatham railway passes through the parish. The land is chiefly arable, with some hop-gardens and waste. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to that of Nonington, in the patron. of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, contains monuments by Chantrey to the Montressor family.

WOMERSLEY, a par. in the lower div. of Osgoldcross wap., West Riding co. York, 6 miles S.E. of Pontefract, and 10 N.W. of Doncaster. It is a station on the Lancashire and Yorkshire and Great Northern railways. The par. is situated on the river Went, and includes the tnshps. of Little Smeaton, Cridling Stubbs, Walden Stubbs, and Womersley. The soil is of various qualities, consisting of sand, loam, and clay, upon a subsoil of limestone, which is extensively worked, and on the southern bank of the river are quarries of freestone. The business of lime-burning is extensively carried on. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of York, val. £260. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. There are National schools, chiefly supported by Lord Hawke and the vicar. At Walden-Stubbs is an ancient hall, once the seat of the Shuttleworth family, but now a farmhouse. The manor of Little Smeaton is chiefly the property of Lincoln College, Oxford. Lord Hawke is lord of the manor.

WOMERSLEY ROW, a hmlt. in the par. of Calverley, wap. of Morley, West Riding co. York, 4 miles N.E. of Bradford.

WONASTOW, a par. in the hund. of Lower Skenfreth, co. Monmouth, 2 miles S.W. of Monmouth. The village is situated on the road to Abergavenny and on the river Trothy. The principal residence is Wonastow Court, built for the Herberts in the time of Henry VI., but now the seat of Sir W. Pilkington, Bart. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £100. The church is dedicated to St. Wormow or to St. John the Baptist.

WONERSH, a par. in the first div. of Blackheath hund., co. Surrey, 3 miles S.E. of Guildford. It is situated on the road from Arundel to Brighton, and intersected by the Wey and Arun canal. The surface is hilly towards the eastern boundary. The soil is generally light, consisting of iron sand, but in parts clayey. The manor house of Tangley, originally a hunting box of King John, was in 1585 converted into a residence by Sir F. Duncombe. On Shimley Green a market and fair were formerly held under charter of Charles II., but long since discontinued. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £190. WONSTON, a par. in the upper div. of Duddlesgate hund., co. Hants, 6 miles N. of Winchester, 5 S. of Whitchurch, and 4 S.W. of Mitcheldever station, on the London and South-Western railway. The par. is situated on the road between Witchurch and Winchester, and includes the hmlt. and vil. of Sutton Scotney. The surface is varied, and the soil fertile, on a substratum of chalk. The Kingsworthy harriers meet here. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £1,160, with 20 acres of glebe, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is modern, the former edifice having been destroyed by fire in 1714. There are National and infant schools. The Dean and Chapter of Winchester are lords of the manor.

WOOBURN, a par. in the hund. of Desborough, co. Bucks, 3 miles S.W. of Beaconsfield, and 4 E. of High Wycombe. The village, which was formerly a market town under charter of Henry VI., is situated at the confluence of the river Wye, or Wick, and the Thames. It was held by Earl Harold, and after the Conquest came to the Bishops of Lincoln, who had a palace on the site now occupied by Wooburn House. It was here that Bishop Smith, in the time of Henry VII., tormented heretics in "Little Ease Chamber," and the first Lord Wharton received William III. The population in 1861 was 2,245, many of whom were employed in the paper, mill-board, and flour-mills, turned by the Wycombe stream, while the females were employed in the manufacture of bone-lace. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £120. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, contains a carved font, 4 brasses, and monuments to the Bertie and Wharton families, of whom was the Duke, "the scorn and wonder of our days." There is also a mortuary chapel of the Earls of Lindsey. There are National and infant schools. Fairs for cattle and horses are held on the 4th May and 12th November. James Dupré, Esq., of Wilton Park, is lord of the manor.

The charities produce about £6 per annum.

WOODBOROUGH, a hmlt. in the par. of Winiscombe, co. Somerset, 2 miles N.W. of Axbridge.

WOODBOTTOM, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Honley and par. of Almondbury, West Riding co. York, 3 miles S.W. of Huddersfield.

WOODBRIDGE, a par., market town, and port in the hund. of Loes, co. Suffolk, 8 miles N.E. of Ipswich, and 26 from Colchester. It has a railway station, and can be approached by vessels of 120 tons, which come up to the quays from Woodbridge haven. The town is mentioned in Domesday survey, and in the 12th century had an Austin friary founded by the Rouse family, who still possess the manor. It was anciently a subport to Yarmouth, and was ravaged by the plague in 1666. The town is on the banks of the Deben, about 12 miles from its confluence with the sea, and at the point where the roads to Ipswich, Saxmundham, and Debenham intersect, the principal street being nearly a mile in length. It is regularly built, and lighted with gas. It contains some good houses, especially in the neighbourhood of the market-place, which is spacious. There are bonding warehouses, wharves, and quays, and a ship-building yard. A coasting trade is carried on, in which 30 vessels belonging to the port are engaged, the exports being corn and malt, and the imports coal, timber, seeds, colonial produce, groceries, wine, and spirits. The principal public buildings are the custom-house, public lecture hall, erected in 1851, with mechanics' institution and reading-room attached; the old sessions-house for St. Ethelred's liberty, built in 1587, and lately restored; a bridewell, three commercial banks, and a savings-bank; there are also corn-mills, a brewery, maltings, iron-foundry, whiting factory, and a rope walk. Quarter sessions are held regularly, as also a county-court monthly, and petty sessions every Thursday. The town has a small local trade, being advantageously situated in a corn and grazing district. Its population in 1851 was 5,161, but in 1861 it had decreased to 4,513. The living is a perpet. cur. endowed with the rectorial tithes, in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £390. The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, is a structure of the time of Edward III., and was repaired in 1839 at the expense of G. Thomas, Esq. Prior to the Reformation it had an image of the Virgin and four altars, and contains several brasses, now defaced, monuments to Jeffery Pittman, a benefactor to the town, and to the Carthews of Woodbridge Priory. There is besides a church built in 1845, and dedicated to St. John. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Society of Friends have chapels. There is a free grammar school, founded by Dorothy Seckford in 1662, and remodelled and incorporated in the Seckford charity, 1865, which charity has more than £3,000 per annum, the greater part being the endowment of Seckford's hospital or almshouses, founded in 1587 by Thomas Seckford, Esq., Master of Requests, for 62 widowers or bachelors. The present structure, which stands near the site of the old pile, has a chapel and a terrace walk in front. The new cemetery, situated a little to the S.W. of the town, was tastefully laid out in 1856, and has two mortuary chapels in the Norman style of architecture. Woodbridge gives name to a Poor-law Union, comprising 46 parishes, but the union poor-house is situated in the parish of Nacton. It is also the head of a New County Court district and superintendent registry. In the immediate vicinity of the town are many seats, and at Mr. Whincopp's is a collection of British, Roman, and Saxon antiquities discovered in the neighbourhood. At Kingston, commonly called Kyson, in the blue clay, Mr. Colchester first discovered the two rare fossils hyræotherium and megacus, or monkey. C. Saxton, a native of this town, published the first county maps in the reign of Elizabeth. Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet, died here in 1849, and lies buried in the graveyard of the Friends' meeting-house; Crabbe was also a surgeon's apprentice here. Thursday is market day, when business is chiefly done in corn. Fairs are held on Lady-day, chiefly for horses, the first Tuesday in April, and on Michaelmas-day, and the day following, in lieu of the 23rd of October.

WOOD-BURCOTE, a hmlt. in the par. of Towcester, co. Northampton, 1 mile S. of Towcester.

WOODBURN, a rivulet in co. Antrim, Ireland, on which are large calico works, about 2 miles from Carrickfergus.

WOODBURN, EAST and WEST, hmlts. in the par. of Corsenside, co. Northumberland, 4 miles N.E. of Bellingham, on the river Reed. The Wansbeck Valley railway has a station here.

WOODBURY, a par. in the E. div. of Budleigh hund., co. Devon, 3 miles S.E. of Topsham, 7 S.E. of Exeter, and 5 N.E. of Exmouth. At Woodbury Road is a station on the Exeter and Exmouth branch of the London and South-Western railway. It is a large village, or rather decayed market town, situated on the estuary of the navigable river Exe, which bounds the parish on the W. Petty sessions are held here every alternate Thursday. The population in 1861 was 1,966. Overlooking the village is an ancient earthwork, called Woodbury Castle, being an irregular double-ditched camp of British origin, on the summit of Woodbury common, from whence is a view of the valleys of the Exe and Otter. The par. includes the chplry. of Woodbury Salterton, recently constituted a separate ecclesiastical district, and the hmlts. of Ebford, Exton, Grindle, Gulliford, Nutwell, and Woodmanton. There are several seats, as Nutwell Court, Upper Nutwell, and Ebford Barton. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £150, in the patron. of the Vicars Choral of Exeter cathedral. The church, dedicated to St. Swithin, contains monuments to the Prideaux and Pollexfen families, and the matrix of an ancient brass to the Haydons. There is besides a small church entirely free, built by subscription in 1851. The Unitarians have a chapel at Gulliford. There are National and endowed schools for both sexes. A pleasure fair is held on Whit-Wednesday. The Hon. T. Rolle is lord of the manor.

WOODBURY, a hmlt. in the par. of Gamlingay, co. Cambridge, 5 miles S.W. of Caxton.

WOODBURY, or WOODLEY, a tythg. in the par. of Romsey Extra, co. Hants, adjoining Romsey.

WOODBURY-SALTERTON, an ecclesiastical district, formerly a chplry. in the par. of Woodbury, co. Devon, 6 miles S.E. of Exeter, and 4 from Topsham. The ecclesiastical district, which has a population of 498, comprises portions of the parishes of Woodbury, Colaton-Raleigh, and Aylesbeare consolidated. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was built in 1844, at the cost of Miss M. Pidsley, of Greendale. There are also free schools, built and endowed by the same lady in 1846.

WOODCHESTER, a par. in the hund. of Longtree, co. Gloucester, 2½ miles S.W. of Stroud. This place is supposed to derive its name from having been the site of a Roman station, where a tesselated pavement 48¾ feet square, with a bath, pottery, coins, and other signs of a large Roman villa, were found. The village is situated on an eminence forming part of the Cotswold range of hills. There are several woollen mills. Spring Park, the seat of the Earl of Ducie, anciently belonged to the Maltravers, from whom it came to the Arundels, Huntleys, and Ducies. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £350. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a monument to Sir G. Huntley. The Priory, late the seat of Sir S. Wathen, is now a monastery. The Baptists have a chapel. There are several schools partially endowed.

WOODCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Lower Wirrall, co. Chester, 3½ miles S.W. of Birkenhead, and 7 N.W. of Great Neston. The par. comprises the tnshps. of Arrow, Barnston, Irby, Landican, Noctorum, Pensby, Prenton, Thingwall, and Woodchurch. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £829. The church of the Holy Cross contains four modern painted windows, and an old sculptured font. There are free, National, and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £65 per annum, of which £50 is the endowment of Greave's free school.

WOODCHURCH, a par. in the hund. of Blackbourne, lower div. of Scray lathe, co. Kent, 5 miles N.E. of Tenterden, and 4 from Appledore railway station. It is situated on the borders of the Shirley Moor, containing, in 1841, a population of 1,278, and in 1861, of 1,262, the decrease being mainly owing to emigration. The soil is heavy. Part of the land is in hop-gardens. Traces of an ancient Roman road have been discovered in this parish. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £610. The church, dedicated to All Saints, contains brasses of a priest, date 1320, an old font, and numerous monuments, including those of Sir Simon Woodchurch, knighted by Edward I. at the siege of Caerlaverock, and surnamed Malleus Scotorum, and Sir John Clarke.

WOODSTOCK, a chplry., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, locally in Wootton hund., but comprised within the lib. of Oxford, co. Oxford, 8 miles N.W. of Oxford, and 62 N.W. of London, or 71 by the Great Western railway, which had a station at Woodstock Road, which is about 2 miles from the town. It was here that Alfred the Great translated Boëthius into Saxon, and here Henry I. formed the first deer park in England by enclosing a portion of the woods with a stone wall. The palace, which had been rebuilt by Henry I., became a favourite residence of Henry II., who here formed the Bower, a white castle, remains of which were visible in 1622, for his mistress, Fair Rosamond, the daughter of Lord Clifford, of Clifford Castle, in Herefordshire. The approach to the Bower was concealed by means of a labyrinth, the site of which is said to be indicated by a fountain or well. The palace was enlarged by Henry VIII., who built the gatehouse in which the Princess Elizabeth was confined by her sister, Queen Mary, in 1554, and which was taken down in 1700. In the civil war of Charles I., the palace was defended by Captain Fawcet, who finally dismantled it, and no traces of it are now left; but at Old Woodstock, a place a little without the limits of the municipal borough, are several old houses, in one of which Chaucer is said to have resided whilst composing some of his poems. At the Restoration, the honour and manor of Woodstock reverted to Charles II., and continued in the possession of the crown till presented by Queen Anne to the Duke of Marlborough, as a reward for his triumph at Blenheim over the French and Bavarians, in 1704. The parliament confirmed the grant, and voted half a million sterling for the erection of Blenheim Palace, 1715. The extreme length of the building, which was erected after designs by Sir John Vanbrugh, is 850 feet, enclosing three sides of a court, and covering seven acres of ground. —The town of Woodstock, more correctly called New Woodstock, is situated on the river Glyme, which runs into the Evenlode, a branch of the Isis. The townhall was erected about 1766, at the expense of the Duke of Marlborough, after a design by Sir William Chambers. There are also a bank, savings-bank, and union workhouse, erected at an expense of £4,800, and situated in the parish of Hensington. Woodstock was once famous for the manufacture of steel ornaments, but this trade has totally disappeared. The manufacture also of doeskin gloves was introduced at an early period, and although now declined, still gives considerable employment. The population in 1851 of the parliamentary borough was 7,983, and in 1861, 7,827, inhabiting 1,663 houses. Previously to the passing of the Reform Act of 1832, it returned two members to Parliament from the reign of Elizabeth, but now only one. It is a borough by prescription, having been incorporated by Henry VI., and confirmed by Charles II. The corporation consists of a high steward, a mayor, who is also returning officer, a recorder, and 4 aldermen, who act as magistrates within the borough, besides a town clerk and 16 common councilmen. Woodstock is the head of a Poor-law Union, new county court, and superintendent and registry districts, comprising 31 parishes; it also gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of Oxford, and gives title of viscount to the Duke of Portland. St. Martin's, Bladon, is the mother church, to which Woodstock is a chplry., joint val. £500. Woodstock chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, was rebuilt in 1785, on the site of a chantry founded by King John, of which a doorway has been preserved in the S. wall. In the interior are columns, with grotesque heads on the capitals, supporting pointed arches, and a brass of R. Baily, bearing date 1441. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There are almshouses for six widows, built in 1793, at the expense of the Duchess of Marlborough. The charities produce about £150 per annum. There is a grammar school, founded and endowed in 1585, by Richard Cornwall, a native of the town; it possesses an income from endowment of about £70 a year, with a residence, and since 1850 has been reopened to the sons of inhabitants of the town. There are, besides, two endowed free schools, one of which, under the benefaction of the Rev. Sir R. Cocks, clothes and educates 12 boys and 12 girls. Roman coins were discovered here in 1700, on the pulling down of the palace gatehouse, and also in 1755, on the site of King John's cottages. Tuesday is market day. Fairs are held on the first Tuesdays in February, April, August, October, November, and December, the four first being principally for cheese and cattle; also a pleasure fair on Whit Tuesday.

WOODSTOCK CASTLE, a demesne of co. Kilkenny, Ireland, near Athy. It is an ancient seat of the O'Moores of Leix, situated on the river Barrow, and is now in ruins. It was originally built by a descendant of the Earl of Pembroke, towards the close of the 13th century, and was taken by storm by O'Neil in 1647.

WOOKEY, a par. in the hund. of Wells-Forum, co. Somerset, 2 miles W. of Wells, at the foot of the Mendip hills. The par. includes the ecclesastical district of Henton, and the hmlt. of Wookey Hole, which latter derives its name from a limestone cavern, the entrance to which is narrow, but within it are several apartments, one 80 feet high, and another 120 feet long. From the innermost chamber a stream of water, the primary source of the river Axe, gushes out in an impetuous torrent, turning several paper and flour mills. In the gravel in and around the cavern the remains of the rhinoceros and other extinct animals, together with those of man, have been found, and in the time of Henry VIII. a plate of lead was discovered bearing the name of the Roman emperor Claudius. The land is chiefly in pasture, being occupied by dairy farms, producing Cheddar cheese. The Bishop of Bath and Wells had formerly a palace on the site now occupied by Mellefont Abbey, and at Castle are traces of Fenny Castle fortification, mentioned by William of Worcester as in ruins in his time. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £300, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, contains an ancient font, monuments to the Clarke, Piers, and Salmon families, and an organ presented by Thomas Weare in 1848. There is besides the district church of Henton, dedicated to Christ, erected in 1847. The register commences in 1565. The Bible Christians have a chapel at Henton. There are National schools for boys and girls. The church lands yield about £67 per annum, and the poor's lands £40.

WOOLAVINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Rotherbridge, rape of Arundel, co. Sussex, 1 mile S.E. of Midhurst, and 4 miles S.W. of Petworth. This parish, which anciently belonged to the earldom of Arundel, consists of several portions lying at a considerable distance apart, and distinguished as East Woolavington, near Petworth, and West Woolavington, near Midhurst. The village or hamlet of East Woolavington is situated at the base of the northern acclivity of the South Downs, and contains the original parish church, while the hamlet of West Woolavington adjoins Midhurst, extending along the road to Chichester, and contains the church of St. Mary Magdalene, recently erected. Woolavington Park is the property of the present Bishop of Oxford, who is lord of the manor and patron. The living is a rect.,* val. £277, in the dioc. of Chichester. The parish church is dedicated to St. Margaret. There is a National school. The charities produce £8 per annum.

WOOLBEDING, a par. in the hund. of Eastbourne, rape of Chichester, co. Sussex, 1½ mile N.W. of Midhurst, within which borough it is situated, on the river

Rother. The par. includes the hmlt. of Redford. It is mentioned in Domesday survey as Welbeding, at which time it was held of the king by allodial tenure, except one carucate which Roger de Ulebeding held by the sergeanty of carrying the gonfanon before the king when he visited Sparkeforde in Hants. It subsequently became the property of the Earls of Arundel, and now belongs to the Hon. George Ponsonby, who is lord of the manor, and resides at Woolbeding House, where are a bronze fountain, removed from the quadrangle at Cowdray, and a tulip tree, the trunk of which is three feet in girth. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £250. In the chancel of the church is a stained-glass window, removed from the priory of Mottesfont in Hants. The register dates from 1581.

WOOLBOROUGH, or WOLBOROUGH, a par. in the hund. of Haytor, co. Devon, containing Newton-Abbot.

WOOLCOMBE, a tythg. in the par. of Melbury Bubb, co. Dorset, 5 miles N.W. of Cerne Abbas.

WOOLDALE, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirkburton, West Riding co. York, 5 miles S. of Huddersfield. In 1861 the population was 5,322. The manufacture of woollen cloth is carried on extensively, and there are numerous fulling mills on the river Colne. The tnshp. includes, besides part of the large and populous town of Holmfirth, the hmlts. of Lydgate, Totties, and Scholes. Wooldale is in the graveship of Holme. S. W. L. Fox, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WOOLENGRANGE, a par. in the bar. of Gowran, co. Kilkenny, Ireland, 3 miles N.W. of Thomastown. The village is situated on the river Nore, and was once the property of Jerpoint Abbey. The living is a rect. united to Burnchurch.

WOOLER, a par., tnshp., and small market town in the E. div. of Glendale ward, co. Northumberland, 18 miles N.W. of Alnwick, 16½ S. of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and 11 from Belford station on the York and Berwick railway. It is situated near the border of the county, in a country varied with hills and glens, principally belonging to the range of the Cheviots, the Humbleton, Hedgehope, and Beamish Head hills. One of the head streams of the Till flows through Wooler in a north-western course to join the Beaumont and College rivers. The town, which contains many old thatched houses, but has recently been much improved, occupies an elevated site at a short distance from the Edinburgh and Newcastle road, from which it is approached by a bridge of four arches. In the reign of Henry I. it was granted to Robert de Muscamp, and came through the noble families of Scrope, D'Arcy, Percy, and Grey, to the Earl of Tankerville, who is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The par. includes, besides the town of Wooler, the tnshp. of Fenton, and several hamlets. On several of the surrounding hills are traces of camps or cairns, especially at Humbledon Heugh, near the pillar which marks the spot where Percy defeated Douglas, the "Tine man," in 1302. The town has never entirely recovered from having been partially consumed by fire in 1722, but recently several buildings have been erected, including Glendale union workhouse, built in 1837; the register office, where the poor-law guardians meet; the new prison, erected in 1850 at a cost of £1,000, where prisoners are confined preliminary to their committal to Morpeth jail. There are besides a post-office, branch bank, dispensary, mechanics' institute, with library and reading rooms, brewery and corn mills. The population in 1861 was 1,697, many of whom are employed in agriculture and in sheep herding, for which the neighbouring hills and moors afford scope. Petty sessions are held at Wooler and Ford alternately, and a new county court monthly at the "Anchor Inn." It is also a polling place for the county elections. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Durham, val. £460, in the patron. of the bishop of Chester. The church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, was rebuilt in 1765. In the interior are an antique font, a mural tablet to the late vicar, the Rev. W. Haigh, and a painted E. window. The Roman Catholic church, dedicated to St. Ninian, contains a carved altar of Caen stone, an E. window of four compartments, and two painted mortuary windows. The Free Kirk, Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, and Baptists have chapels. There are National schools, built in 1837. Market day is Thursday. Fairs are held on 4th May for cattle and horses, third Monday in May and 17th October for cattle and sheep, 27th September for sheep, second and third Thursdays in July for wool, and first Thursday in March for hiring servants.

WOOLFARDISWORTHY, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of Hartland, co. Devon, 9 miles S.W. of Bideford, and 6 N.E. of Hartland. The parish extends to the sea-coast, and is watered by a branch of the river Torridge. Besides the village of Woolfardisworthy, which is chiefly inhabited by fishermen, and extends into the adjoining parish, there is a village or hamlet on the same bay as Clovelly. The soil is sandy, and the subsoil clay. Building stone is extensively quarried, and is shipped from Bideford to various places. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £60. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, contains an antique font and a monument to the Earls of Enniskillen, who were formerly resident here. The Wesleyans and Bible Christians have chapels. There are National and Sunday schools, the latter held in the church. W. Buck, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WOOLFARDISWORTHY, a par. in the hund. of Witheridge, co. Devon, 6 miles N. of Crediton, and 14 from Exeter. The par. is situated on the river Creedy, and contains Berry Castle, an ancient Roman encampment on the way to Motland. The soil is a mixture of loam and clay upon a subsoil of rock. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £280, with 15 acres of glebe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1845. There is an infant school supported by the rector. The charities produce about £1 per annum.

The living is a rect.* annexed to that of Road, on the opposite side of the river, in the dioc. of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. The register commences in 1570. There are National and Sunday schools.

WOOLWICH, a par., market town, Royal naval yard, and principal military arsenal in the kingdom, in the hund. of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, co. Kent, 2½ miles E. of Greenwich, within which borough it is included, and 8½ miles S.E. of St. Paul's, London, by land, or 9½ by water, owing to the windings of the river Thames, which is here crossed by a steam ferry to North Woolwich. There are two lines of railway: the North Kent on the Kentish side of the river, and a branch of the Great Eastern on the Essex side, to North Woolwich, besides which the steam packet companies, called the Waterman and the Woolwich, ply constantly between London, Gravesend, Southend, Sheerness, and Harwich. The parish of Woolwich lies chiefly on the S. bank of the Thames, but extends across the river to the Essex side, where it comprehends the suburb of North Woolwich, and certain lands running along the N. bank of the river, but included in the county of Kent. The town, which has rapidly increased of late years, extends over a mile in length, and in 1861 had a population of 41,693. The upper portion contains many good houses, rising gradually up the gravel ridge known as Shooter's Hill, extending from Erith to Greenwich, while the lower and more densely-populated portion occupies the district between the ridge and the river, and extends to the adjoining parish of Plumstead. The principal street runs nearly parallel to the river, and is crossed by numerous others, which are all paved and lighted. The most interesting objects in Woolwich are the arsenal, the dockyard, and other government establishments unequalled for their importance. The Royal arsenal, which lies to the E. of the town, includes the gun factories, carriage department, royal laboratory, and military stores department, said to be the largest depôt for army stores in the world; within the arsenal is the ordnance yard, where 28,000 pieces of ordnance, and upwards of 4,000,000 of shot and shells are kept in constant readiness, with fittings and harness for 10,000 artillery horses. Admission to see these establishments is obtained by an order from one of the heads of departments; for foreigners by an order signed by the Secretary at War, obtained through the intervention of their own ambassador; to some other portions of the works the public are readily admitted, especially to the Rotunda, which contains models of all her Majesty's dockyards, the principal fortifications in the world, and the various kinds of arms, both ancient and modern; also to the pontoon ground on the W. side of the Artillery barracks, where experiments are occasionally made with boats on certain large sheets of water, which serve for exercise in pontooning, and in transporting heavy ordnance over rivers. On the E. side of the barracks, facing the Military Train barracks, is the Royal Artillery Institution, with museum, theatre, laboratory, and reading-rooms for the use of the officers of the Royal Artillery, and a small observatory adjoining; S.E. of the Repository grounds is the Royal Military Academy, founded in 1719, for the education of cadets intended for the Artillery and Engineers, and between the arsenal and the dockyard are the Royal Marine Barracks, with the Naval and Marine Hospital, the latter erected in 1859. The dockyard, which is supposed to be the most ancient royal dockyard in the kingdom, occupies the narrow strip of land extending along the S. bank of the river, about a furlong in breadth, and rather more than half a mile in length. The outer and inner basins are both of the largest dimensions, and have been recently much enlarged and improved by the construction of granite docks, capable of containing the largest ships in the royal navy. The dockyard is under the charge of a Commodore-Superintendent, and is one of those which are to be surrounded with lines of circumvallation, under the Fortifications Act. A practice-range of nearly three miles in extent has been formed towards Erith, and the Plumstead marshes also serve as an artillery practising ground, where all the government ordnance are first proved. At the south-western corner of the common, adjoining the Shooter's Hill road, are ranges of new buildings called the Camp, for the service of the military train, and an extensive hospital. The town is governed by a local board of health, and is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who meet here on Monday and Friday, and hold petty sessions for the division on the first Thursday in every month, at Blackheath. It is included in the Woolwich branch of the Greenwich county-court district, and, under the Reform Act, joins with Deptford and Greenwich in returning two members to parliament for the borough of Greenwich. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £740, and in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church of St. Mary, overlooking the river and dockyard, was rebuilt in the reign of George II., under an Act of parliament. There are besides the new parish church of St. Thomas, St. John's and Holy Trinity chapels-of-ease, and the Garrison, Ordnance, and Dockyard chapels. The Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Wesleyans, Independents, Baptists, and other Dissenting congregations, have chapels. There are several higher class schools, and National, Sunday, and government schools, the last for the education of soldiers' children. Market-day is on Friday. Garrison races take place in July.

WOOTTON, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Mary-de-Lode, co. Gloucester, half a mile S.E. of Gloucester, of which it is a suburb, containing the county gaol and lunatic asylum.

WOOTTON, a par. in the lib. of East Medina, Isle of Wight, co. Hants, 4 miles N.E. of Newport, and 3 W. of Ryde. The parish is bounded on the N. by the Motherbank, and on the E. by a creek or inlet of the sea, which runs from Fishbourne past the bridge, or causeway, called Wootton-Bridge, about 2 miles to Briddesford. There is a ferry from here to Portsmouth. The village consists of only a few houses and cottages built in the valley on either side of the creek, but close to the bridge in the adjoining parishes of Arreton and Binsted is a larger village called Wootton Bridge. On an eminence S. of the bridge is Fern-hill, a modern residence with a tower. It was built by the late Lord Bolton, when governor of the island, and is now the residence of S. Saunders, Esq. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, contains tablets to the White and Shute families. The Wesleyans have two chapels. In the vicinity are the ruins of Quarr Abbey, and at Wootton Farm is an oak 47 feet in girth.

WOOTTON, a hund. in co. Oxford, contains the pars. of North Aston and Steeple Aston, St. Michael Barford, Steeple Barton, Westcott Barton, Begbrook, Bladon, Cassington, Coggs, Long Combe, Doddington, Dunstew, Ensham, Glympton, Handborough, Heythrop, Kidlington, North Leigh, South Leigh, South Newington, Ronsham, Sandford, Shipton-on-Cherwell, Stanton Harcourt, Stonesfield, Tackley, Great and Little Tew, Wilcote, Woolvercott, Wootton, Nether and Over Worton, and Yarnton, comprising 67,590 acres, exclusive of the city of Oxford and borough of Woodstock.

WOOTTON, a par. in the hund. of the same name, co. Oxford, 2 miles N.W. of Woodstock, within which borough it is situated. The par. is situated on the river Glyme, a branch of the Isis, and includes a portion of the town of Woodstock. Near the line of the ancient Akeman' Street are Killingworth Castle, and traces of several Roman camps. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £800, in the patron. of New College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are a free school for 12 boys, endowed in 1788 by Charles Parrott in 1785, and one for 6 girls by Mr. Lee, a late rector. The charities produce about £100 per annum, including the school endowments and £60 from church lands. The Duke of Marlborough is lord of the manor.

WOOTTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Oswestry, co. Salop, 4 miles S.E. of Oswestry, near the Montgomery canal.

WOOTTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Eccleshall, N. div. of Pirehill hund., co. Stafford, 1 mile from Eccleshall.

WOOTTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Ellastone, S. div. of Totmonslow hund., co. Stafford, 4 miles S.W. of Ashbourn, and 7 N. of Uttoxeter. In this township is Wootton Hall, built by Inigo Jones.

WOOTTON ABBOTS, a quarter in the par. of Whitchurch Canonicorum, co. Dorset, 6 miles N.W. of Bridport.

WOOTTON-BASSETT, a par. and market town, formerly a representative borough, in the hund. of Kingsbridge, co. Wilts, 18 miles N. of Devizes, 37 N.W. of Salisbury, and 82¾ W. of London by the Great Western railway, on which it has a station. It is mentioned in Domesday survey as Wodeton. It sent two members to parliament until disfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832, and is still governed under charters of Henry VI. and Charles II. by a mayor, 2 aldermen, and 12 capital burgesses. The broadcloth manufacture, for which it was once famous, has now entirely disappeared. In 1857 the town was presented with one of the Russian guns taken at Sebastopol. The population of the parish in 1861 was 2,191. The town, which has rapidly improved during the last few years, consists principally of one street nearly half a mile in length. The older houses are in general indifferently built, and many thatched. It contains a town hall, market house, and two branch banks. The streets are clean and well lighted with gas. The Wilts and Berks canal passes within half a mile S. of the town, and at Whitehill Farm is a chalybeate spring. The old manor-house, once a royal residence, is now converted into a farmhouse. The land in the vicinity is hilly, but wooded and fertile. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £540. The parish church is dedicated to All Saints, or St. Bartholomew. Some years since, while cleaning the S. wall, a rude painting was discovered, representing the murder of Thomas-à-Becket. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The free school, founded and endowed in 1688 by Richard Jones, with £25 per annum, is now amalgamated with the National schools. There are also British, infant, and Sunday schools. There are traces of an ancient hospital, dedicated to St. John, which, in the reign of Henry IV., was given to the priory of Bradenstoke in this county. Market day is Tuesday. Fairs for cattle are held on the second Tuesday in every month, and statute fairs for hiring on the Tuesday before the 6th April and first Tuesday in October. The estate belongs to the trustees of Sir Henry Meux, Bart.

WOOTTON-COURTNEY, a par. in the hund. of Carhampton, co. Somerset, 4 miles S.W. of Dunster, and 4 S. of Minehead. The village is situated on the road from Dunster to Portlock, in a valley between the heights of Grabhurst and Dunkerry, which latter has an elevation of 1,668 feet above the level of the sea. The soil is a mixture of clay, stone brash, and marl, on a subsoil of shellet rock. There are quarries of Red sandstone and limestone, and a mine of iron-ore at the base of Dunkerry. The manor anciently belonged to the Courtney family, but is now the property of the Hon. R. H. Dutton, M.P. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £390, in the patron. of Eton College. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The rectory was once held by Bishop Montague, of Norwich. The charities produce about £40 per annum. A fair is held on the 9th September.

WOOTTON-FITZPAINE, a par. in the hund. of Whitchurch-Canonicorum, co. Dorset, 6 miles N.W. of Bridport, and 4 N.E. of Lyme-Regis, on a branch of the river Char. The soil is chalky, and the substratum abounds with flint and gravel. The principal proprietor is Colonel Luttrell, of Wootton House. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £250. There are a parish school and some endowed almshouses.

WOOTTON-GLANVILLE, a par. in the hund. of Buckland-Newton, co. Dorset, 12 miles N. of Dorchester, 7 S.E. of Sherborne, and 5 N. of Cerne Abbas. The village was once the residence of John Churchill, the grandfather of the great Duke of Marlborough. The par. includes the tythg. of Newlands, and an ancient camp called Dungeon. The soil is a deep clay interspersed with chalk and gravel in patches, upon a substratum of sandstone, in which fossils are found. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £210. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was repaired in 1741, and has on the S. side a mortuary chapel, once a chantry, containing an altar tomb with a recumbent effigy of a knight, several mural monuments, and remains of ancient stained glass.

WOOTTON-HILL, an ecclesiastical district in the par. of East Woodhay, co. Hants. See WOODHAY, EAST.

WOOTTON HILL, a hmlt. in the par. of Leek-Wootton, co. Warwick, 3 miles N.E. of Warwick, near the river Avon.

WOOTTON LEEK. See LEEK-WOOTTON, co. Warwick.

WOOTTON-NEWLAND, a tythg. in the par. of Wootton-Glanville, co. Dorset, 8 miles S.E. of Sherborne.

WOOTTON, NORTH, a par. in the hund. of Sherborne, co. Dorset, 2½ miles S.E. of Sherborne, formerly included in that of Sherborne. The living is a perpet. cur. not in charge, val £60. The church was a chapel-of-ease to Sherborne. G. Digby Wingfield Digby, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WOOTTON, NORTH, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge Lynn, co. Norfolk, 3½ miles N. of Lynn, near the road from Hunstanton to Lynn, overlooking the Wash. The parish, which is bounded on the W. by the Lynn channel, is within the peculiar jurisdiction of the borough of Castle Rising. A considerable tract of land is now being enclosed from the sea. The soil is a mixture of sand and stiff loam, producing good crops. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £260. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £40 per annum. The Hon. Mrs. Howard is lady of the manor and principal landowner.

WOOTTON, NORTH, a par. in the hund. of Glaston-Twelve-Hydes, co. Somerset, 2½ miles S.E. of Wells, and 3½ S.W. of Shepton Mallet. The village is situated at the entrance of a valley watered by two small rivulets, which turn several mills, one being employed for grinding bark for a tannery. The surface is varied, and the soil a clayey loam intermixed with red marl. The tythg. of Worminster has recently been annexed to this parish. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £50, with an addition of £40 from the ecclesiastical Commissioners. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The register commences in 1728. There is a Sunday-school, with a small endowment. The charities produce about £5 per annum. W. Langton, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WOOTTON-RIVERS, a par. in the hund. of Kinwardstone, co. Wilts, 4 miles S. of Marlborough, 3 N.E. of Pewsey, and 15 E. of Devizes, on the Kennet and Avon canal. There are an iron foundry and an agricultural implement factory. The surface in some parts is hilly, and the land chiefly arable. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £450, in the patron. of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Brasenose College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, has an E. window of three lights. There are a National school and a charity of £15 per annum for apprenticing poor children.

WOOTTON ST. LAWRENCE, a par. in the lower div. of Basingstoke hund., co. Hants, 3½ miles W. of Basingstoke, and 52 from London. The village is situated near the line of the London and South-Western railway, which intersects the parish, comprising the tythgs. of East Oakley, Ramsdell, and Upper Wootton. The principal seats are Many Down House, of Sir B. Rycroft, Bart., and Tangier Park. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £275, in the patron. of the dean and chapter, who are also lords of the manor. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, contains a monument to Sir Thomas Hooke, Bart., and tombs of the Wither family. The Independents have a chapel. There is a parochial school supported by subscription. The charities produce about £3 per annum.

WOOTTON, SOUTH, a par. in the hund. of Freebridge Lynn, co. Norfolk, 2½ miles N.E. of Lynn. The parish is bounded on the W. by the Lynn channel, and the low lands are protected from the sea by an embankment. The surface is varied, but comprises a considerable extent of heath and salt marsh. The village is situated on the road from Wells to Lynn. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £270, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has on the N. side the mausoleum of the Hamonds of Swaffham. In the interior are an antique Norman font, an altar tomb to Sir J. T. Winde, and several sedilia and piscinæ. There is a National school.

WOOTTON UNDERWOOD, or WOOTTON-UNDER-BERNWOOD, a par. in the hund. of Ashendon, co. Bucks, 9 miles N.W. of Aylesbury, 7 N.W. of Thame, and 2 from Ludgershall. The village is situated on a branch of the river Thame, within a mile of Darton

Spa, where a pump-room and baths have been built for the use of invalids resorting to the spa. The surface is flat, and the greater portion of the parish is taken up by the park and grounds of Wootton House, the seat of the Marquis of Chandos; the mansion was built after the model of old Buckingham Palace, at Pimlico, on the site of a more ancient one, which was painted by Thornhill, but destroyed by fire in 1821. There is a tradition that the living was once held by Thomas-à-Becket, and the manor is known to have come through Walter Giffard and Richard de Grenville to the Dukes of Buckingham. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £90. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is of the 12th century, recently modernised at the expense of George, late Duke of Buckingham. On the S. side is the Grenville chapel, or mausoleum, built in 1343 by William and Mary Grenville. There are numerous monuments and several stained-glass windows bearing the shields and armorial devices of the Dukes of Buckingham. Schools for boys and girls are supported by the Marquis of Chandos.

WOOTTON-WAWEN, a par. in the hund. of Barlichway, co. Warwick, 8 miles N.W. of Stratford-on-Avon, and 6 from Knowles station on the Great Western railway. It is situated on the river Alne and the Birmingham canal, and includes the chplry. and market town of Henley-in-Arden.

WORCESTER, a cathedral city and county of itself, market and assize town, a parliamentary and municipal borough, capital of the shire, and the seat of a bishopric, in the hund. of Oswaldslow, and in the union, diocese, archdeaconry, and deanery of Worcester, 29 miles N. of Gloucester, 26½ S.W. of Birmingham, and 111 N.W. of London by road, and 121 by Great Western railway. The city is built on a gently undulating plain, on the eastern bank of the Severn, is situated in the midst of a well-wooded county, and is one of the most ancient cities in the kingdom. It is supposed to have been originally built and fortified by the Britons, subsequently occupied by the Romans, and considerably enlarged under the Saxons, who gave it the name of Weorgan-ceaster. A strong wall at one time encircled it, remains of which still exist. It became the see of a bishop in 680. Its increase and prosperity were much checked by the continual inroads of the Welsh; nevertheless it was a place of importance at the time of the Norman conquest. It suffered severely in the reign of John from the incursions of its old foes, was often besieged, and several times captured and pillaged. Henry I. granted it a charter. In 1622, by a charter of James I., it became a city and county of itself, and was governed by a mayor and corporation. In 1835, under the Municipal Reform Act, the city was divided into five wards, and is now governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 36 councillors.—Worcester has generally played a conspicuous part in the great struggles that have successively rent the land, and has paid dearly for her partisanship. The city suffered much during the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster, but it was in the civil war between Charles I. and the parliament that it suffered most severely. Worcester espoused the royal cause, and from its faithful adherence to it received the motto still inscribed on its arms, "Civitas in bello et in pace fidelis." In 1642 took place the engagement between the Royalists under Prince Rupert and the parliamentary forces, when the former were defeated. In 1646 the city was besieged by the Roundheads, and after a resistance of four months was compelled to capitulate, but obtained honourable terms. But the most remarkable event in connection with the history of Worcester was the battle between the English army under Cromwell, and the Scotch, who had espoused the cause of Charles II. In 1651 Charles entered Worcester and repaired the fortifications. He was shortly followed by Cromwell, who laid siege to the city, and on the 3rd of September was fought the battle of Worcester. The struggle continued for upwards of four hours, and ended in the total defeat of the Scotch, and the flight of the King to France. The Scotch loss was 2,000 killed, and 8,000 wounded or prisoners. Since this event Worcester has not been the scene of any remarkable occurrences.—Worcester returns two members to parliament, and has done so since the year 1293. By the act of Edward I. the right of voting was conferred upon all £10 shareholders and resident freemen not receiving alms. The population, according to the census of 1861, is 30,969. In 1851 it was 27,677. The area of the registrar's district is 6,699 acres. The population of the separate parishes is as follows:—St. John Bedwardine, 2,974; St. Clement, 2,434; All Saints, 2,421; St. Swithin, 764; St. Oswald, Whistones Tything, 3,191; St. Nicholas, 1,933; St. Martin, 5,601; Blockhouse, 1,671; St. Andrew, 1,768; College Precincts, 89; St. Alban, 323; St. Michael Bedwardine, 570; St. Helen, 1,484; St. Peter, 5,746. The town has much extended within the last few years. The principal streets are broad, and are set off by many good shops and handsome commercial buildings; red brick has been chiefly employed in its architecture. The city is well supplied with gas, and an abundant supply of water is procured from works recently constructed at Popeiron. It has rail and water communication with all parts of the country. Both the Midland and the Great Western (late West Midland) Railway Companies have access to the city. There are two stations, that in Foregate-street belonging to the Great Western, and that on Shrub Hill, which is large and commodious, and occupied jointly by the two companies. The extensive railway works belonging to the West Midland (Great Western) were destroyed by fire in 1864, and have not been rebuilt.—The Severn is navigable for ships of eighty tons as high as Worcester, and extensive alterations have been effected to improve the navigation, and numerous canals connect the Severn with other rivers. A stone bridge spans the river, connecting the city with the suburb of St. John Bedwardine. It was erected in 1781, at a cost of £30,000, and widened in 1841. It consists of five arches, is 270 feet long, and 33 feet wide. An iron railway bridge of two spans also crosses the river.—The chief architectural ornament of Worcester is its cathedral. The see was founded by Ethelred, King of Mercia. Bishop Oswald completed the cathedral in 983, and it was burnt by Hardicanute's soldiers in 1041. The foundation of a new edifice was laid by Bishop Wolstan in 1084, and the building roofed in in 1089. The church and monastery was injured by fire in 1113, and again in 1202. In 1207 King John visited the cathedral, and contributed 100 marks towards its restoration. In 1218 Bishop Sylvester dedicated the new building in the presence of Henry III. In 1224 the charnel house and Lady Chapel were erected by Bishop William de Blois. In 1320 Bishop Wakefield erected the W. window and the porch. The cathedral is in the form of a double cross; the outside is plain and void of ornamentation. The beauty of the edifice consists in its height, space, and the lightness of its architecture, which is aided by numerous pinnacles rising from all points of the building. Its proportions are:—length 514 feet, breadth 78, height 68, and the tower, which rises from the centre of the W. transept, is 200 feet high. Portions of the old Norman structure remain in the walls, but the architecture generally is of the Early English and Decorated styles. The windows are of a later date. The nave is Early English. The tracery of the W. window is of the Decorated style. The triforium and clerestory run the whole length of the edifice. The lancet window at the E. end has been filled with stained glass by Hardman. The choir, which is Early English, has a groined roof, stone altar-screen handsomely carved, and stone pulpit with ornamented sculptures. The bishop's throne and the stalls are not in keeping with the rest of the building, and are to be replaced by others. The altar-screen it is intended to remove to the N. side of the altar, and a reredos by Skidmore, presented by the dean, is to take its place. The Lady chapel is in the Early English style of architecture. The cloisters are in very perfect preservation. Round the chapter house is a tier of Norman arches intersecting one another. There are numerous monuments in the cathedral, the most remarkable of which are the tomb of King John, whose remains are deposited in front of the altar, and the monumental chapel of Prince Arthur, eldest son of Henry VII.; the tabernacle work and groined roof of this chapel are beautiful; its stands at the S. side of the altar, and beneath it, in the Dean's chapel, are the tombs and monuments of Bishop Giffard and Lady de Clifford. There are many other monuments of bishops, abbots, lady abbesses, and Templars, all in good preservation. There is a modern monument, by Chantrey, in the Bishop's chapel, of Lady Digby. In the Lady chapel is a tablet, with quaint inscription, to the memory of the wife of Izaac Walton. The whole of the interior of the cathedral has been restored, and the exterior, which was much weather-worn, has been refaced at an immense outlay. The chief restorations now in hand are the tower and the cloisters. The N. porch is nearly restored. A set of ten bells is to be placed in the tower, the former set of seven (originally eight) having been taken down. The cathedral establishment consists of the dean (Very Rev. John Peel), four canons, and four minor canons. The present bishop is the Right Rev. Henry Philpot, late Master of St. Catherine's College, Cambridge: the value of the see is £5,000 per annum. The episcopal palace is Hartlebury Castle, near Kidderminster. The old bishop's palace near the cathedral is now the deanery. The see is in the province of Canterbury, and extends over the counties of Worcester and Warwick, has a population of 857,775, the number of benefices being about 450. The number of benefices in the archdeaconry is about 270. The bishop has 61 livings in his gift, and the dean and chapter 38. In the College Green, near the cathedral, stands Edgar's tower, erected in the year 970, ornamented on the eastern front by statues of Edgar and his two queens, Elfleda and Elfreda.—There are several public buildings in Worcester. The guildhall in High-street is of the Italian style, erected in 1723; over the doorway is the motto, "Floreat semper fidelis civitas," and a statue of Queen Anne, and on each side statues of Charles I. and II.; five statues, representing Justice, Peace, Plenty, Chastisement, and Hercules, adorn the top of the building. The shire hall, or assize court, is in Foregate-street; it is a stone building of the Ionic order, was built in 1835, and cost upwards of £35,000; a portico 100 feet long adorns the front. The county hall is 90 feet by 40. The different courts are well adapted for their purposes. The judge's lodge is at the back of the hall in Sansome-walk. The county gaol is in Castle-street; it was originally constructed in 1809 at a cost of £19,000, but nearly treble that amount has since been expended on its enlargement and repairs. The city prison was built in 1824, on the site of the Grey Friars House, in Friar-street and Union-street. The Natural History Society's museum is in Foregate-street. In the corn market is the music hall. The corn exchange, in Angel-street, was erected in 1849; the interior is 70 feet by 60½ feet. Opposite to the guildhall, in the High-street, is the market house, erected in 1804; behind it, in Friar-street, is the meat and fish market. The cattle market is in the Butts. The hop market is in the Foregate. The city library, with 13,000 volumes, is in Pierpont-street. The infirmary, which was erected by public subscription at a cost of upwards of £6,000, in 1770, is in Castle-street. The city possesses, in addition, a dispensary, Bank-street; an ophthalmic institution, Castle-street; and a homœopathic dispensary in Taylor's-lane. Besides the city library, there is a county library, a Friends' library, and a law society and reading-room. The theatre is in Angel-street. An extensive arboretum and pleasure-ground, erected in 1850 by a company, are situated in Sansome-walk. The workhouse is on Tallow Hill. The union embraces an area of 15 square miles. The temperance hall is in Silver-street. The city police-station is at Lowesmoor, and the county police-station is in Castle-place. The Society of Arts and the School of Design are in Pierpont-street. The grammar school is in Church-street.—The trade of Worcester is considerable, arising not only from the surplus products of the county and its own manufactures, but from the great conveniencies of its extended rail and water carriage. The principal manufactures are gloves and porcelain; in connection with the glove-manufacture are leather dyeries and glove machine works. For its porcelain, Worcester has long been celebrated; in the manufacture of common pottery it has been superseded by Staffordshire; for the finer porcelain it still holds its place. Porcelain manufacture was first introduced in 1751; the porcelain works are objects of great interest to strangers; there are two of them, belonging to Messrs Grainger and Co., and to the Worcester Royal Porcelain Co., limited (late Kerr and Co.). Worcester being in the midst of a hop-growing country, an extensive trade is carried on in hops, the annual sale realising upwards of 20,000 pockets, or nearly 40,000 cwt. After the gathering, the Shire Hall, Guildhall, and other public buildings, as well as the hop market, are devoted to their storage. Connected with the trade of Worcester are a large vinegar manufactory, an iron foundry, and engineering establishments, coach-works, British wine manufactory, organ works, &c. There are boat and barge building-yards. Extensive engine-works are being erected by a limited company at Shrub Hill.—Worcester possesses eleven parish churches. St. Alban's, an old building, supposed to have been first erected in the 8th century, is in Fish-street; in the interior are some old monuments; val. £75, and patron the bishop. All Saints', in All Hallow's, in the gift of the lord chancellor, val. £150, has a peal of ten bells. St. Andrew's, in Copenhagen-street, has a spire rising to the height of 245½ feet; it is in the gift of the dean and chapter, and is worth £106. St. Clement's, on the W. side of the river, was erected in 1823, in the Norman style, and is in the gift of the dean and chapter, and is valued at £150. St. Helen's, in High-street, was the first church established in the city; its value is £120, and is in the bishop's gift. St. Martin's, val. £178, patrons the dean and chapter, is a brick building, with six bells, in the Corn Market. St. Peter's, Church-street, Sidbury, is valued at £233, and in the patron. of the dean and chapter. St. Nicholas', in the bishop's gift, and val. £264, in the Cross, has a Doric front; the tower has an illuminated clock, and six bells. St. Swithin's, in St. Swithin's-street, has a set of chimes and six bells; the pulpit is curious; it is in the gift of the dean and chapter, and is worth £170. St. John's Bedwardine is of the value of £635, and in the gift of the dean and chapter. St. Michael's Bedwardine, val. £90, patrons the dean and chapter, is near the Cathedral; it was originally erected as early as 826; the present edifice is in the Decorated style. There are besides, connected with the Establishment, St. Paul's, in St. Paul's-street, a perpet. cur., val. £150, in the gift of the bishop; St. George's chapel, a chapel-of-ease for the parish of Claines; St. Oswald's chapel, in the Tything; and Holy Trinity, in the bishop's gift, at Shrub Hill, erected in 1865, in the Decorated style; in the interior is some handsome stone carving about the altar, font, and pulpit. There are two chapels belonging to Lady Huntingdon's Connexion, one in Bridport, the other recently erected in Lowesmoor. The Independent chapel in Angel-place is a handsome building; the formation of the congregation dates from 1662. The new Baptist chapel in Sansome-walk is an elegant specimen of the Decorated style of architecture, and has a short, light spire. The Roman Catholic chapel in Sansome-walk was rebuilt in 1828; in 1687 James II. attended mass in the old building. A Presbyterian chapel is being erected in Castle-street. There are also Wesleyan chapels, a Friends' meeting-house, a Free Church chapel, and Plymouth Brethren and Methodist chapels. In addition to the grammar school (founded by Queen Elizabeth) are the College school, founded by Henry VIII., and Bishop Lloyd's school. There are a Roman Catholic school and several National and British schools.—The charities of Worcester are numerous, their income exceeding £4,000. They are mostly in the form of hospitals, as St. Oswald's, in the Tything; Hask's, in New-street; Berkeley's, in the Foregate; Wyatt's, in Friar-street; Inglethorpe's, in Foregate-street; Goulding's and Shrewsing's, in the Tything; Moore's, in Silver-street. They maintain collectively 105 poor men or women, who receive allowances of from 3*s.* 6*d.* to 8*s.* a week, and in some instances coals and clothing. Walsgrave's almshouses for 8 occupants are in Powick-street. Queen Elizabeth's charity, in the Trinity, maintains 29 women. Worcester participates in White's yearly gift of £100 in rotation with 23 other towns; it is disposed of in the form of a loan for 10 years of £25 for each of four young freemen. Worcester possesses a Dorcas society, mendicity society, lying-in charity, and many other benevolent institutions.—Worcester has three banks: the Worcester Old Bank, the National and Provincial, and the City and County; the latter company have erected a magnificent pile of buildings of the Italian order, with granite columns, at Doveway, in the Cross. The savings-bank is in Shaw-street, as also the post-office. There is a swimming-bath in Sansome-walk.—Worcester is a polling place, and place of nomination for the western division of the county, possesses county, borough, and ecclesiastical courts; assizes, quarter sessions, and petty sessions are held here. The race-course is on Pitchcroft; the races are held in July and end of October or beginning of November. Fairs are held the third Mondays in January, February, March, and April, the second Monday in May, first Tuesday in June, second Monday in July, first Tuesday in August, 19th of September, 8th of October, first Monday in November, and the second Friday in December. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday. The following weekly newspapers are published at Worcester:—Chronicle, Wednesday; Herald, Saturday; Journal, Saturday; News, Saturday; Advertiser, Saturday. The Journal dates from 1709, and the Herald from 1794. The old cemetery is on Tallow Hill, and the new one on Rainbow Hill, 1¼ mile from the city. The lunatic asylum is at Powick. The borough magistrates, aided by a stipendiary, sit daily.

WORCESTERSHIRE, an inland co. in the W. Midland district of England, near the Welsh border, bounded on the W. by Herefordshire, on the S. and S.E. by Gloucestershire, on the E. and N.E. by Warwickshire, on the N. by Staffordshire, and on the N.W. by Salop, which entirely surrounds a small detached portion. It extends from 52° 0′ to 52° 30′ N. lat., and from 2° 14′ to 3° 0′ W. long., being 35 miles in length from N. to S., and 40 miles in extreme breadth, but the average does not exceed 17 miles. It is irregular in outline, having a circuit of about 220 miles, with 9 detached pieces. It contains 472,165 statute acres, of which about two-thirds are arable, and 100,000 acres in pasture and meadow; the waste lands not exceeding 20,000 acres at the utmost. When viewed from the Malvern hills on the Herefordshire border, which is the highest point in the county, the surface presents the appearance of one vast, fertile plain, two-thirds of which lie to the E. of the Severn, and is varied chiefly by the vales of Worcester and Evesham, the former stretching N. and S. for at least 30 miles, and the latter, watered by the Avon, occupies the south-eastern part of the county.—In the earliest historical period it was inhabited by the British tribes, Cornavii and Dobuni, neighbours of the Silures, and under the Roman dominion formed part of the province Flavia Cæsariensis. There are traces of the Roman roads called Upper Saltway and Ryeknield Street, which traversed the county, but being then for the most part low and woody, it received but little attention from the Romans. On the complete conquest of the island by the Saxons, it was occupied by the powerful tribe of the Wicking, or Hwickians, who at first established a séparate commonwealth, but soon came under the kings of the Mercians, or Middle English. The Saxons soon discovered the advantages of this county for agricultural pursuits, and reduced the whole of the surface under cultivation. In the 9th and 10th centuries it suffered from the predatory incursions of the Danes, but was at an early period very populous, as implied by the comparatively small size of the county, and its extending on both banks of the Severn, then evidently spanned by bridges. In the reign of Henry III. it was the scene of the battle of Evesham, in which Simon de Montfort and the barons were overthrown by Prince Edward, afterwards Edward I. During the civil war of Charles I. it was the scene of many stirring incidents, and at Worcester, on the 3rd of September, 1651, Oliver Cromwell routed the Scotch army under Prince Charles.—The land is rich, varied in hill and dale, and well wooded and watered. The extensive vales, particularly that of Worcester, extending through it from N. to S., a distance of about 30 miles, and from a quarter of a mile to a mile in breadth, consist of meadows and pastures of rich quality, which may be mown at pleasure; other large tracts are in hop-grounds and orchards, for which the county has been long famous. The quantity of cider and perry made is sufficient not only for domestic consumption, but for exportation to other parts of the kingdom, together with quantities of raw fruit. In various parts of the county are tracts of oak and ash timber, with numerous oak coppices, and many of the heights bordering the Severn are ornamented with plantations of fir. The hedge-rows, too, are stocked with valuable elm timber. The most important produce of the underwoods, which are supposed to be the remains of the ancient forest with which this county was once covered, are poles for the hop-yards and charcoal for the iron-works. Of the hilly wastes the principal are the upper parts of the Malvern hills, with the Worcestershire Beacon on the S.W., which are the highest points in the county, rising to the height of 1,444 feet above sea level, or 1,313 above the Severn; and in a line N. from them are the Abberley hills, with the Lickey and Clent hills in the eastern, and the Breedon hills in the southern part of the county, being offshoots of the Cotswolds, the summits of which are unenclosed, affording only rocky sheep-walks.—The Malvern and Lickey hills are of igneous origin, consisting of granite, sienite, and greenstone, intermixed with quartz. The precipitous swells of Bromsgrove Lickey are composed chiefly of quartz, and the Cawney and Tansley hills chiefly of basalt. The hills to the N. of Dudley consist of mountain limestone of the lias formation, which forms the substratum of nearly the whole south-eastern portion of the county. The remainder of the county, including the extensive vales of Worcester and Evesham, belongs mostly to the New Red sandstone formation, called triassic. In the N.W. is the Bewdley coal basin, and in the N. the Dudley basin, at which latter place are likewise beds of ironstone. In the vale of Evesham, in the parishes of Badsey, the three Littletons, and Prior's Cleeve, are quarries of a calcareous flagstone, capable of receiving a high polish; freestone for building is obtained in various places; and the limestone hills upon which stand the castle and part of the town of Dudley are completely undermined by quarries, in which the rare fossil called the sea-louse, or Dudley locust, is found. Common rock salt, and a species of gypsum, occur near Droitwich and Stoke Prior, famed for their brine springs, which are 80 feet down; and at Stourbridge is fine clay for crucibles, and sand for glass.—The soil in the vale is fertile, and in parts alluvial, consisting of a deep rich sediment, which has been deposited by floods during a long series of ages. In the middle, southern, and western districts, the soil is chiefly a rich clay or loam, but in the N. a rich loamy sand, and in the E. there are some light soils. Brick earth is found nearly everywhere, and clay for fire-bricks, chiefly in the northern part of the county. The mines employ about 2,000 persons, the produce consisting of coals, iron, and salt.—In the rivers salmon, grayling, shad, and lampreys abound. The principal river, the Severn, traverses the county from N. to S. by Bewdley, Stourport, Worcester, and Upton, to Tewkesbury, where is the last of a series of locks. It is navigable for vessels of 80 tons as high as Worcester, and of 60 tons as high as Bewdley, or 180 miles from the sea. Its tributaries are the Stour in the N., which is canalized throughout, the Warwickshire Avon in the S., which is navigable from Stratford-on-Avon, and receives the waters of the Piddle, the Teme in the W., and the Salwarpe and Leadon or Leddon. The canals are important, connecting the Severn with the other English rivers, including the Staffordshire and Worcester, which communicates with the Grand Trunk by the Stour; the Dudley, which goes from Birmingham, northwards by Dudley to Stourbridge; the Worcester and Birmingham, which traverses the county in a north-easterly direction, and joins the Birmingham and Stafford; the Droitwich, which connects that town with the Severn; and the Leominster and Kingston canal, in the western part of the county. There are mineral spas at Malvern, where is a hydropathic establishment, Abberton, Bromsgrove, Churchill, Dudley, Evesham, Tenbury, and a chalybeate spring at Kidderminster.—The climate is mild and healthy, even on the Malverns, but on the eastern hills it is colder.—Branches of the Midland and West Midland railways traverse the county; the former, which is part of the Birmingham and Bristol line, passes by Bromsgrove and Worcester, and the latter, which takes a circuitous rout through the county, passes by Evesham, Worcester, Droitwich, Kidderminster, and Stourbridge, to Dudley; and about 8 miles of the tram railway from Stratford to Moreton, go by Alderminster and Eatington. —The main lines of road from Worcester are, that by Pershore and Evesham to Shipston-on-Stour, that down the valley of the Severn, by Upton and Tewkesbury, to Gloucester, that by Powick and Great Malvern to Ledbury, that by Droitwich and Bromsgrove to Birmingham, that by Spetchley and Kington to Stratford, and another up the valley of the Severn, by Stourport and Kidderminster, to Stourbridge.—The northern part of the county is the chief seat of the hardware and iron manufactures, which are the most flourishing, employing together above 10,000 hands, chiefly at Dudley, Stourbridge, Old Swinford, Wolverley, Cradley, Belbroughton, Bewdley, Hartlebury, King's Norton, Redditch, Feckenham, &c., the last two named places being the seats of the needle and fish-hook manufactures. Other manufactures are those of carpets and rugs at Kidderminster, employing 1,500 hands; porcelain and gloves at Worcester, the former employing 500, and the latter 2,000 hands; glass at Dudley and Stourbridge, employing 400; besides woollens, worsteds, bombazines, silk, ribbons, plush, coach lace, and horsehair, employing together 2,000 persons, chiefly at Bromsgrove and Kidderminster. There are salt-works, breweries, maltings, tanneries, coke-ovens, alkali, vitriol, and vinegar works, paper mills, horn factories for making combs and lanterns, and several minor branches of industry.—For purposes of civil government the shire is divided into East and West Worcestershire, each returning two members to parliament; and since 1831 into ten divisions, viz., Worcester, Kidderminster, Hundred House, and Upton, in West Worcestershire; and Blockley, Droitwich, Dudley, Northfield, Pershore, and Stourbridge, in East Worcestershire, instead of the five ancient hundreds of Blackenhurst, Doddingtree, Halfshire, Osbaldstow, and Pershore. Its capital is Worcester, a cathedral city, assize town, and parliamentary borough, returning two members, and containing a population of 31,227. The other boroughs are Bewdley, Droitwich, Dudley, Evesham, Kidderminster, and Stourbridge, each returning one member to parliament; also 13 market-towns, and about 300 villages and hamlets. There are 286 townships and 197 parishes, besides 8 extra parochial places. In the ecclesiastical arrangement it belongs to the dioceses of Worcester and Hereford, in the province of Canterbury. It is governed by a lord-lieutenant, custos rotulorum, high sheriff, and 40 deputy-lieutenants, assisted by about 300 magistrates. The shire is within the Oxford circuit and Midland military district, and belongs to the jurisdiction of the Birmingham Court of Bankruptcy. The population of the whole county in 1861 was 307,397, viz., 186,431 within the eastern, and 120,966 in the western division, of whom about a third are resident in Worcester, Dudley, Kidderminster, Bromsgrove, Evesham, and Redditch.—The remains of antiquity are not numerous, the principal being those of the Roman station Salinæ, now Droitwich; of Bredon Hill, Witchbury and Kemsey Roman camps; a British barrow on Clent Heath, and a Danish camp at Conderton, near Witchbury. There are ruins of abbeys at Bordesley and Evesham, and of religious houses at Dodford, Dudley, and Coles Hill.

WORCESTER WALK, an ext. par. lib. in Dean Forest, co. Gloucester, 6 miles W. of Newnham. It includes the village of Lidbrook.

WORDESLEY, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Stourbridge and par. of Old Swinford, co. Worcester, 2½ miles N.W. of Stourbridge, on the Stafford branch canal, near the river Stour.

WORDWELL, a par. in the hund. of Blackbourn, co. Suffolk, 6 miles N.W. of Bury St. Edmund's. The living is a rect. united to that of West Stow. The church is dedicated to All Saints.

WORFIELD, a par. in the Hales-Owen div. of Brimstree hund., co. Salop, 4 miles N.E. of Bridgnorth. It is watered by the Worfe, a tributary of the Severn, and is divided into N.E., S.E., N.W., and S.W. quarters, comprising 34 tnshps. The village is situated on the road from Bridgnorth to Wolverhampton. The soil is a rich loamy ryeland. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £240. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, or to St. Matthew, has recently been restored, and contains 2 modern brasses, a decorated octagon font, and several monuments to the Bromley family. There are endowed grammar and parochial schools. The charities produce about £250 per annum. At Burcott, in 1809, a bone cave was discovered. A fair is held at Wyken in this parish on the first Monday in February for cattle and sheep. Thomas Charlton Whitmore, Esq., is lord of the manor of Worfield, and W. S. Davenport, Esq., is lord of the manor of Wyken.

WORGRET, or WORGATE, a tythg. in the pars. of East Stoke and St. Mary Out, hund. of Hundredsbarrow, co. Dorset, 1 mile W. of Wareham.

WORKINGTON, a par., seaport, and market town in the ward of Allerdale-above-Derwent, co. Cumberland, 32 miles S.W. of Carlisle, 7 N.E. of Cockermouth, and 5 S.W. of Maryport. It has stations on the Cockermouth and Workington and Whitehaven junction branches of the London and North-Western railway. The par. contains, besides the town of Workington, the tnshps. of Great and Little Clifton, Stainburn, and Winscales. It is bounded on the W. by the Irish Sea, on the S.E. by the river Maron, and on the N. by the Derwent, which is here crossed by a bridge of three arches. In the reign of Henry VIII. it is described by Leland as a "lytel prety fyssher toun," and was the spot where Mary Queen of Scots landed 16th May, 1568, in her flight to England, and was hospitably entertained by Sir Henry Curwen, of Workington Hall. Although ancient and somewhat irregularly built, the town, which extends for nearly a mile along the S. bank of the Derwent, contains many good shops and several spacious streets. There are a corn market in the Upper Town, assembly rooms, theatre, custom-house, commercial bank, savings-bank, dispensary, three-arched bridge, water and gasworks, and public offices in Christian-street, where petty sessions are held weekly on Wednesday. The town and harbour are governed by trustees, and there is a district board of guardians for the poor. It is a subport to Whitehaven, and has a harbour capable of admitting vessels of 400 tons burden, lined with quays which are now undergoing considerable extension. Shipbuilding is extensively carried on in the yards of the Harrington and Workington Company and of Charles Lamport, Esq., and large iron works have recently been erected by the Hermatite Iron Company, for the manufacture of iron and tin plate, for which the abundance of coal and iron ore in the immediate vicinity furnish every facility; a considerable business is also done in connection with the coasting and timber trades, and in the salmon fishery, belonging to the Earl of Lonsdale; but the chief source of employment are the collieries, one of which, known as Chapel Bank, consisting of three mines, was inundated by an irruption of the sea in 1837, when 27 men and boys were drowned. Within the last few years another coal-field has been discovered at Great Clifton. The soil in the neighbourhood is generally fertile, it is a light sand, and in a few places it inclines to moss. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chester, val. £1,000, in the patron. of the Curwen family. The parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, was rebuilt in 1770. There is, besides, the district church of St. John, erected in 1823 by the Church Building Commissioners at a cost of £10,000, with a district assigned to it, 1836. The Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, Independents, Presbyterians, and Primitive Methodists, have chapels. There are National and infant schools. Market days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on the Wednesday before Holy Thursday and 18th of October. Henry Curwen, Esq., is lord of the manors of Winscales and Workington, and the Earl of Lonsdale of the manors of Great and Little Clifton and Stainburn, to whom the greater part of the land belongs.

WORKSOP, a par. and market town in the Hatfield div. of Bassetlaw wap., co. Notts, 12 miles N.E. of Mansfield, 26 N. of Nottingham, and 146 N.W. of London by road, and by the Great Northern and the Sheffield and Lincolnshire railways, on which it is a station. It is situated in a hollow or valley watered by the river Ryton, near the northern extremity of Sherwood Forest; the Chesterfield canal, which communicates with the river Trent, passes through it. The par. is the largest in Nottinghamshire, extending from Shireoaks to near Babworth, a distance of about 8 miles, and comprises the chplries. of Osberton and Shireoaks, together with the tnshps, of Gateford, Haggonfield, Radford, and Scofton, besides several hmlts. At the Conquest it was given to Roger de Buisli. It afterwards came to William de Lovetot, who built a castle, and founded the priory for black canons, part of which now forms the parish church, and is considered one of the best specimens of Norman architecture in England. After passing through the hands of the Nevills and Furnivalls, the manor came by marriage to John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, who built Worksop manor in the reign of Henry V. This mansion, which was rebuilt by the Dukes of Norfolk in 1761, after the fire which destroyed some of the Arundel marbles, has been recently for the most part pulled down and the estate sold to the Duke of Newcastle, whose seat is Clumber Park. From the number of its mansions and parks this neighbourhood has been designated the "Dukery;" the most prominent, besides those of the Duke of Newcastle, just mentioned, being Welbeck Abbey, the seat of the Duke of Portland; Thoresby Park, recently of the Duke of Kingston, but now of Earl Manvers; and Osberton Hall, of G. Savile Foljambe, Esq.; Kiveton Hall, now pulled down, was a seat of the Duke of Leeds, and Worksop Manor of the Duke of Norfolk. Worksop is noted for several magnificent old oaks; through one of them, the "Greendale oak," one of the Dukes of Portland drove a carriage and four.—The town of Worksop consists of one long street, with several minor streets and lanes branching from it on either side. The houses are in general well built, and the streets paved and lighted with gas. The town is under the charge of a local board of health. It contains a townhall and corn-exchange, erected in 1854, in the Venetian style of architecture, with markets attached; also the moot-hall, a very ancient structure, formerly used as the townhall; a savings-bank in Bridge-street, erected in 1843, a mechanics' institute with library of 2,000 vols.; two branch banks, union workhouse, brass and iron foundry, and several flour and saw mills. There are no manufactures, properly so called, in the town, but malting is carried on to a large extent, and there are factories for agricultural implements, thrashing machines, chemical works, and malt kilns; many persons are also employed in the making of Windsor chairs, railway sleepers, and packing cases. The town is not incorporated, but petty sessions are held fortnightly on Wednesday for the Worksop div. of Bassetlaw wap., also a county court monthly at the corn exchange. Shireoaks, so called from an oak, not now standing, which stretched its branches into 3 counties (Notts, York, Derby), was lately constituted an ecclesiasticald istrict, the old chapel turned into a school-room, and a new church built by the late Duke of Newcastle, the foundation stone having been laid by the Prince of Wales. The Poor-law Union contains 26 parishes and townships, viz., 4 in Derbyshire, 11 in Notts, and 11 in the West Riding of Yorkshire. It is a polling place for East Retford. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £388. The Abbey church is dedicated to SS. Mary and Cuthbert. The church has, at the E. end, a Norman window, with three lights recently inserted, above which is a circular window, the gift of working mechanics. The structure has recently undergone a thorough repair, at a cost of more than £8,000, and the old galleries and pews removed to make way for open carved stalls. There are also churches at Osberton and Shireoaks. The Roman Catholics have a chapel and schools, the gift of the late Duke of Norfolk in 1840. There are also chapels belonging to the Independents, Wesleyans, Association Methodists, Primitive Methodists, and Baptists. There are National schools, supported partly by endowment; infant schools, and Sunday-schools in connection with the several chapels. The charities produce about £50 per annum. Wednesday is market day. Fairs are held on the second Wednesdays in April and October for horses, cattle, and sheep. The Duke of Newcastle is lord of the manor and lay impropriator.

WORLABY, a par. in the N. div. of Yarborough wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 4½ miles N.E. of Glanford Brigg, and 4 N.E. of Barnetby station on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway. The village is situated on the Wolds. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £360. The church is dedicated to St. Clement. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a hospital or almshouse for four widows, built and endowed in 1663 by John, Lord Bellasyse, baron of Worlaby, part of whose old seat still remains with their punning motto, "Bonne et belle assez." The charities produce about £36 per annum. T. G. Corbett, Esq., of Elsham Hall, is lord of the manor.

WORLABY-BY-ALFORD, or WORLABY-NEAR-LOUTH, a par. in the hund. of Hill, parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 7 miles N.E. of Horncastle, and 8 S. of Louth. It is situated on the Wolds, and comprises only one farm.

WORLDHAM, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Alton, co. Hants, 9 miles S.W. of Farnham, and 2½ S.E. of Alton. About two-thirds of the land are arable, and the remainder pasture and hop plantations, with about 90 acres of woodland. The surface is undulating, and the soil loamy upon the malm rock, except where a strong cold clay. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £145, in the patron. of Magdalen College, Oxford. There is a parochial school for boys and girls. Lord Sherborne is lord of the manor.

WORLDHAM, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Alton, co. Hants, 2½ miles S.E. of Alton, adjoining East Worldham. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £75, in the patron. of Winchester College. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas. On King John's Hill is a tumulus, where fragments of Roman pottery have been found.

WORLE, a par. in the hund. of Winterstoke, co. Somerset, 8 miles N.W. of Axbridge, and 3 E. of Weston-super-Mare railway station. The village is situated near the Bristol Channel, on the road from Bristol to Weston-super-Mare, and on the line of the Bristol and Exeter railway, which skirts the parish on the S. The surface is undulating, and the soil clayey upon limestone and clay. There are mines of lead and calamine, but they are no longer wrought. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £312, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, contains a carved pulpit of stone, sedilia, and fragments of shrine work. The register commences in 1600. The Wesleyans have two chapels, and the Free Church Methodists and Bible Christians each one. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £1 per annum. J. Stephens, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WORLESTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Acton, hund. of Nantwich, co. Chester, 1½ mile N. of Nantwich. It is situated on the river Wheeler, and is a station on the Manchester, Crewe, and Chester section of the London and North-Western railway.

WORLINGHAM, a par. in the hund. of Wangford, co. Suffolk, 6 miles S.W. of Lowestoft, and 2 S.E. of Beccles. It includes the old parish of Worlingham Parva, and is bounded on the N.E. by the navigable river Waveney, which separates it from the county of Norfolk. This place gives the title of baron to the Earl of Gosford, of Gosford Castle, in Ireland, who is lord of the manor and has a seat here. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £260, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to All Saints, or to St. Mary, contains a monument by Chantrey to General Sparrow and his son, and a brass of N. Wrenne, bearing date 1511. There was formerly another church, dedicated to St. Peter, but it has been long since demolished. The charities produce about £30 per annum, chiefly derived from town estate.

WORLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Lackford, co. Suffolk, 1 mile S.W. of Mildenhall, and 4 N.E. of Kennet railway station. The village is situated at the ferry on the S. bank of the river Lark. The soil is sandy and generally sterile, upon a substratum of chalk, and there are rabbit warrens on the heath. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £240. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The register commences about the middle of the 16th century. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £6 per annum.

WORLINGTON, EAST, a par. in the hund. of Witheridge, co. Devon, 6 miles E. of Chulmleigh, and 5 N.E. of the Lapford railway station, on the North Devon line. The village is situated on the Lesser Dart, and has part of an ancient cross. The soil is a red clay. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £300, and 70 acres of glebe. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Bible Christians have a chapel. There is a National school for both sexes. The charities produce about £7 per annum. In the neighbourhood are traces of the Roman way to Exeter, on which urns and coins have been found. The Earl of Portsmouth is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WORLINGTON, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Witheridge, co. Devon, 7 miles E. of Chulmleigh, and 6 N.E. of Lapford railway station. It is situated on the Lesser Dart, and adjoins the village of East Worlington. Within this parish are the ruins of an old house, called Affton Barton, formerly the residence of the Affton and Stukely families, but now converted into a farmhouse. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £160, and 84 acres of glebe. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. L. W. Buck, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WORLINGWORTH, a par. in the hund. of Hoxne, co. Suffolk, 16 miles N. of Woodbridge, 5 N.W. of Framlingham, and 4 S. of Stradbrook. The village occupies one of the most elevated sites in the county. It contains a police-station and post-office. The land, which is in a high state of cultivation, is chiefly the property of Lord Henniker, whose seat is Worlingworth Hall. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. with the cur. of Southolt annexed, £933. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has an oaken roof; a font, with cover, brought from Bury Abbey; brass of a group of children, remains of old stained glass, and several monuments, including one to Elizabeth, Duchess of Chandos, and another to Sir John and Lady Major. The register dates from 1588. There is a free school, founded and endowed by J. Baldry in 1689, and a Sunday-school with a small endowment. The charities produce about £150 per annum, chiefly the produce of the town lands.

WORMBRIDGE, a par. in the hund. of Webtree, co. Hereford, 9 miles S.W. of Hereford, 3 E. of Abbey Dore, and 1 mile S.W. of St. Devereux railway station, on the Newport, Abergavenny, and Hereford line. It is situated on the Worm Brook, a branch of the river Monnow, in the Grey-valley, on the road to Abergavenny. The soil is a mixture of sand and loam, upon a subsoil of sandstone. The living is a don. cur. in the dioc. of Hereford, annexed to St. Devereux. The church, dedicated to St. Thomas the Apostle, has been recently rebuilt. Archer Clive, Esq., of Whitfield Park, is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WORMEGAY, a par. in the hund. of Clackclose, co. Norfolk, 7½ miles N.E. of Downham-Market, 6 S.E. of Lynn, and 4 E. of Watlington railway station. It was a place of importance in the Saxon times, and under the early Norman kings was held by the families of Bardolph and Warren, who had a castle here, of which the moat may still be traced. A priory of Black Canons was founded here in the reign of Richard I., which in 1468 became a cell to the monastery of Pentney. The navigable river Nar bounds the parish on the N., and at Letchey bridge is a brewery and malting establishment. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £20, besides £400 from Queen Anne's bounty, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Michael or to the Holy Cross. There are National schools for this and the adjoining parish of Tottenhill, built in 1840. The charities produce about £10 per annum. D. H. L. Warner, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WORMELOW, a hund. in two divs., lower and upper, in the southern part of co. Hereford; the former contains the pars. of Bridstow, Ganerew, Garway, Goodrich, Hentland, Llangarren, Llanrothall, Marstow, Peterstow, Tretire, Welsh Newton, St. Weonard's, and Whitchurch; and the upper div. the pars. of Aconbury, Ballingham, Great and Little Birch, Boulstone, Much and Little Dewchurch, Dewsall, Harewood, Heywood Forest, Killpeck, King's Cople, Llandinabo, Llanithog, Llanwarne, Orcop, Pencoyd, Sellack, Triville, and part of Foy; together comprising 61,820 acres.

WORMHILL, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. of Tideswell, hund. of High Peak, co. Derby, 2 miles S.W. of Tideswell. The village is situated on the river Wye, under Chee Tor, one of the wonders of the Peak. In this township are mineral springs, which give name to the hundred, and round which the inhabitants anciently used to meet at an annual well-dressing. At a place called Thornsett, Brindley, the engineer, was born. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £270. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The charities produce about £8 per annum. There is a free school, supported by the landowners. Westby Bagshawe, Esq., of Wormhill Hall, is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

WORMINGFORD, a par. in the hund. of Lexden, co. Essex, 3½ miles S.W. of Neyland. The village derives its name from its situation on a ford of the navigable river Stour. The surface rises gradually from the bank of the river to a considerable elevation. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £310. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There is a National school. The charities produce about £50 per annum.

WORMINGHALL, a par. in the hund. of Ashendon, co. Bucks, 5 miles N.W. of Thame. The village is situated near the river Thame, and is the birthplace of Bishop John King, James I.'s "king of preachers," and of his son, Bishop Henry King, the poet, born here in 1591. A market, formerly held on Thursday, was granted to John de Rivers in 1304, with a fair on the festival of SS. Peter and Paul. The charities produce about £100 per annum, of which £80 belong to King's almshouses, founded in 1670 for 12 aged persons.

WORMINGTON, a par. in the lower div. of Kiftsgate hund., co. Gloucester, 5 miles N. of Winchcomb, and 6 from Evesham, on the Isborne stream, under the Cotswold hills. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £150. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity or to St. Catherine. S. G. Gist, Esq., of Wormington Grange, is lord of the manor.

WORMINGTON, an ancient par. in the district of Kelso, co. Roxburgh, Scotland, now united with Linton.

WORMINGTON GRANGE, a hmlt. in the par. of Didbrook, co. Gloucester, 1 mile S.E. of Wormington, and 4 miles N. of Winchcomb.

WORMINSTER, a tythg. in the city of Wells, co. Somerset, 2 miles S. of Wells.

WORMLEIGHTON, a par. in the hund. of Kington, co. Warwick, 5½ miles S.E. of Southam, and 3 N.E. of Fenny Compton railway station. The village is situated near the reservoir of the Oxford canal, and gives title of baron to the Dukes of Marlborough. At the time of the Domesday survey it formed part of the possessions of the Earl of Mellent, and in the reign of Henry VIII. came to the Spencer family, with whom it still remains, the present Earl Spencer being lord of the manor and chief landowner. The land is rich pasture and meadow, with the exception of a few acres. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £80. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a school with a small endowment.

WORMLEY, a par. in the hund. of Hertford, co. Herts, 2 miles N.E. of Cheshunt, 2½ S.W. of Hoddesden, and 6 from Hertford. The parish is traversed by the Cambridge section of the Great Eastern railway and by the New River, and is bounded on the E. by the river Lea. In the Saxon times it was given by King Harold to Waltham Abbey, and having reverted to the crown at the Dissolution, was given by Henry VIII. to the North family, from whom it came to the Cromwells of Cheshunt. In the village is Wormley Bury, the residence of Earl Brownlow. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of London, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, contains a painting of the Lord's Supper, by Palma, effigies in alabaster of W. Puerveye and lady, several altar-tombs of former rectors, and three brasses, the earliest bearing date 1479.

WORMONDISCOMBE, a lib. in the par. of Watlington, co. Oxford, 2 miles from Watlington.

WORM'S HEAD, a dangerous promontory or headland on the S. side of Rhosilly Bay, co. Glamorgan. It is united to the mainland by a narrow strip of rock about three-fourths of a mile long, called Worm's Sound, which is submerged during high tide.

WORMSHILL, a par. in the hund. of Eyhorne, lathe of Aylesford, co. Kent, 5 miles S.W. of Sittingbourne, 9 from Maidstone, and 3 N.E. of Hollingbourn. The village is situated on a plateau 530 feet above the sea, and intersected with valleys. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £260, in the patron. of Christ Hospital, London. The church is dedicated to St. Giles. The register dates from 1700. The charities produce about £6 per annum. There is a school with a small endowment.

WORMSLEY, a par. in the hund. of Grimsworth, co. Hereford, 3½ miles S.E. of Weobly, 8 N.W. of Hereford, and 5 N.W. of Moreton railway station. The village is situated on the road from Weobly to Hereford, and commands a view of the Malvern and Cleo hills. In the reign of John, Gilbert Talbot founded the priory of St. Leonard in this parish for canons of the order of St. Augustine. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £75. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. Sir W. R. Boughton, Bart., is lord of the manor.

WORMWOOD SCRUBS, or WORMHOLT, a common in the Holborn div. of Ossulstone hund, co. Middlesex, 5 miles N.W. of St. Paul's, London. It is situated on the Paddington canal, at the place where the Great Western and West London railways cross.

WORPLESDON, a par. in the first div. of Woking hund., co. Surrey, 3 miles N.W. of Guildford. It is situated on the Wye and Arun navigation, and includes the tythg. of Burgham and the ecclesiastical district and village of Wyke, the latter surrounded by the parish of Ash. In 1829 the floor of a Roman villa, 62 feet long by 23 wide, and divided into five compartments, floored with tesselated pavement of iron-stone, was discovered on Broad-Street Common. The two manors of Worplesdon and Burgham belong to Earl Onslow. Fuller's earth is found. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £710, in the patron. of Eton College. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an old font and an E. window embellished with ancient stained glass. There is also a district church at Wyke, erected in 1858, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £130. There are National schools, built by subscription in 1861, and schools in connection with the district church of Wyke. The charities produce about £18 per annum.

WORRALL, a div. in the tnshp. of Bradfield and par. of Ecclesfield, West Riding co. York, 6 miles N.W. of Sheffield.

WORSALL, HIGH, a chplry. in the par. of Northallerton, wap. of Allertonshire, North Riding co. York, 4 miles S.W. of Yarm, and 10 N.E. of Northallerton.

WORSALL, LOW, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirkleavington, North Riding co. York, 3 miles S.W. of Yarm. It adjoins the chapelry of High Worsall.

WORSBROUGH, a tnshp. in the par. of Darfield, wap. of Staincross, West Riding co. York, 3 miles S.E. of Barnsley, and 11 N. of Sheffield. The village is traversed by the South Yorkshire railway and the Dearne and Dove branch canal, which passes to Worsbrough Bridge, affording facilities of conveyance for the produce of the extensive collieries, stone quarries, and iron works in the neighbourhood. The tnshp. contains Worsbrough Common and Dale, and eight other hmlts. In Worsbrough Dale are extensive mines of the ten-foot coal in full operation, also gunpowder, paper, and corn mills, chemical works, and flint-glass works. There are two churches, dedicated respectively to St. Mary and St. Thomas; the former, a chapel-of-ease to Darfield, was, with the exception of the tower and spire, rebuilt in 1839 at a cost of £1,200; the latter was erected in 1859 at a cost of £3,500. There are chapels for the Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Independents, and three day schools for boys and girls partially endowed, and three church Sunday-schools. The principal seats are Darley Hall, Ouselthwaite, Round Green, and Worsbrough Hall, in which last are preserved a cabinet once belonging to Charles I., the sheets in which he slept the night before his execution, and the block on which the Earl of Stafford was executed. John Jeffrocks, Esq., is lord of the manor of Darley, and Vernon Wentworth, Esq., of Stainborough Hall, of the manor of Worsbrough.

WORSLEY, a tnshp. and vil. in the par. of Eccles, hund. of Salford, co. Lancaster, 6 miles S. of Bolton, and 7 N.W. of Manchester, forming part of the borough of South Lancashire. It is a station on the Manchester and Wigan branch of the London and North-Western railway, and has water communication by means of the Bridgwater canal with all parts of the kingdom. Branching from the trunk canal are a series of underground canals and tunnels, some 180 feet below the surface, cut by Brindley, for the Duke of Buckingham, at a cost of £169,000, and communicating with the extensive collieries. This tnshp. includes the hmlts. of Newtown, Little Houghton, Boothstown, and Ellenborough Chapel. The population in 1861 was 11,875, many being employed in the cotton mills. The soil is clayey, and the subsoil mostly moss. The manor at the time of the Conquest belonged to Elias de Workedesley, and in the 17th century came to the Dukes of Bridgwater, to whom it still belongs, though the greater part of the land and the collieries are now the property of the Earl of Ellesmere, whose seat is Worsley Hall, built in 1806 by Blore in the Elizabethan style, and visited by the Queen in October, 1851. From the windows a view is obtained over seven counties, and in the interior are oak panelling, sculpture, and painting, including Landseer's "Return from Hawking." Adjoining the park are the remains of the old timbered seat of the Duke of Bridgwater, and Wardley Hall, said to have been built in the reign of Edward VI. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £200. The church is dedicated to St. Mark. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels, and there are National and Sunday schools. Worsley is the seat of a superintendent register, but is included in Salford New County-court district, and Barton-upon-Irwell Poor-law Union.

WORSTEAD, a par. in the hund. of Tunstead, co. Norfolk, 3 miles S.E. of North Walsham, and 12 N.E. of Norwich, anciently called Worsteds. The village is situated near the navigable river Ant, which joins the sea at Yarmouth. It was once of more importance than at present, being a manufacturing and market town. The Flemings, in the reign of Henry I., first established here the manufacture of woollen "twists and stuffs;" but this branch of trade having been removed to Norwich in the reign of Richard II., the town gradually declined. The Hall is the seat of the Hon. Rufus Roos, who is lord of the manor, and holds a court-leet, at which constables and other officers are appointed. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £260, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an ancient and a modern screen, also an antique font with a cover and two brasses from 1520. The chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. Andrew, has long since been demolished. The Baptists have a chapel and burial-ground. There are National and British schools, and almshouses, built and endowed by S. Chapman of Norwich, in 1821, for 12 aged people. The charities produce about £45 per annum, including £30 left by Rev. H. Wharton for the repairs of the church. A fair is held on 12th and 13th May for cattle.

WORSTHORN, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Whalley, higher div. of Blackburn hund., co. Lancaster, 2 miles E. of Burnley. It is situated near Scar Moor, about a mile from the confluence of the river Bourn with the Calder, and includes the hmlt. of Hartswood.

WORSTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Whalley, higher div. of Blackburn hund., co. Lancaster, 2 miles N.E. of Clitheroe, near the river Ribble.

WORSTON, an ext. par. lib. or tnshp. adjoining the par. of SS. Mary and Chad, S. div. of Pirehill hund., co. Stafford, 4 miles N.W. of Stafford. It forms one estate, situated on the river Sow, which turns a large corn and silk mill.

WORTH, or WORD, a par. in the hund. of Eastry, lathe of St. Augustine, co. Kent, 1 mile S. of Sandwich. It is situated near the coast of the English Channel, and includes the hmlts. of Felderland and Hecklinge. There are two coastguard stations. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £375, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. The impropriate tithes, amounting to £623 4*s.* 6½*d.*, belong to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury.

WORTH, a tnshp. in the par. of Prestbury and hund. of Macclesfield, co. Chester, 6 miles S.E. of Stockport, 7 N.E. of Macclesfield, and 1 mile from the Poynton railway station. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the collieries belonging to Lord Vernon, who is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WORTH, a hund. in the lathe of Shepway, co. Kent. It comprises part of Romney Marsh, containing the pars. of Blackmanstone, Burmarsh, Dymchurch, Eastbridge, and Orgarswick.

WORTH, a par. in the hund. of Buttinghill, rape of Lewes, co. Sussex, 6½ miles S.W. of East Grinstead, 2 S.E. of Crawley, and adjoining the Three Bridges station on the London, Brighton, and South Coast railway, where the East Grinstead branch turns off, on which are two other stations in this parish. It is situated on the road from Croydon to Cuckfield, chiefly woodland, including Tilgate Forest, Crawley Down, and Old House Warren. The village contains a workhouse, a literary and scientific institution at Pound Hill, and a number of seats, the principal being Worth Park, the residence of J. M. Montefiore, Esq., and a meet for the Horsham hounds, the Grove, the Hall, Tilgate House, Tilgate Manor, Crabbett, Rowfant, the Grange, Huntsland, and Worthbridge. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Chichester, val. £608, with the cur. of Crawley Down annexed. The church was repaired about 20 years since, and contains a square font and monument to the Bethune family. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Crawley Down, dedicated to All Saints. The register dates from the reign of Elizabeth. The Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion have two chapels. There are schools in connection with both churches. The charities produce about £35 per annum. The Earl of Abergavenny and the executors of the late F. S. Blunt, Esq, are lords of the manor.

WORTHAM, a par. in the hund. of Hartismere, co. Suffolk, 5 miles N.W. of Eye, 2 S.W. of Diss, and 3 N.W. of Mellis railway station. The parish is bounded on the N. by the river Waveney, which here separates the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk. The village contains the Hartismere union workhouse for children. There is a considerable extent of common. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £860, and 41 acres of glebe, in the patron. of King's College, Cambridge. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. There is a free school. The charities produce about £7 per annum. On Wortham Ling are traces of a Roman camp.

WORTHENBURY, a par. in the hund. of Maylor, co. Flint, 6 miles S.E. of Wrexham, on the river Dee. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Chester, val. £400. The church is dedicated to St. Deiniol. The charities produce about £4 per annum.

WORTHIN, a par. partly in the hund. of Cawrse, co. Montgomery, but chiefly in the hunds. of Chirbury and Ford, co. Salop, 12 miles S.W. of Shrewsbury, 11 from Welshpool, and 9 from Montgomery. The par. comprises the chplries. of Trelystan and Hope, the quarters of Bing-Weston, Bromblow, Upper Heath, and Worthin, and 15 other tnshps. The village, which was formerly a market-town, under charter of Henry III., is situated on the road from Shrewsbury to Montgomery near the river Rea and the Stipperstones, a ridge of loose stones extending several miles towards Shrewsbury, and said to be the ancient boundary between England and Wales. There are lead mines in the parish, also grit and gravel pits, and the manufacture of flannel is carried on to a small extent. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £1,424 9*s.* 7*d.*, in the patron. of New College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was partially restored in 1849, and contains a monument to Dr. D. Pryce, chaplain to Charles I. There are also churches at Trelystan in Montgomeryshire, and at Hope in Salop, the livings of both being perpet. curs. There are National schools in various parts of the parish; those at Worthin were erected in 1850. The charities produce about £55 per annum. In this parish are a circular mound called "The Beacon Ring," and several barrows scattered about.

WORTHING, a fishing-station, watering-place, and market town in the par. of Broadwater, hund. of Brightford, and rape of Bramber, co. Sussex, 12 miles W. of Brighton, 20 S.E. of Chichester, and 56 S.W. of London by road, or 61 by the London, Brighton, and South Coast railway. It is situated on the English Channel in a flat spot, sheltered on the land side by an amphitheatre of chalk hills, forming part of the South Downs, and has along the sea coast a range of smooth sands stretching westward near 10 miles, and E. about 4 miles. On account of the salubrity and equability of its climate, it is adopted by many families as their winter residence, but the lowness of its situation often causes the sea-fog to lie when it is clear on the downs above. No part of the ground on which it is built is more than 20 feet above the level of the sea, which has been gradually encroaching on the land, having advanced 33 yards from 1699 to 1813, and is still gaining. For a long time the drainage was defective, which, together with the accumulation of sea-weed upon the beach, were sources of discomfort to inhabitants and visitors; effective steps, however, have been taken to remedy these inconveniences, and the sanitary provisions are now good. A constant service of pure water is laid on to every house. The esplanade extends for three quarters of a mile along the shore, and the bathing-machines and baths are of superior character, especially the Royal Baths on the Marine-parade, where warm, cold, and medicated vapour baths are in constant readiness. Worthing first became a resort of sea-bathers and pleasure-seekers towards the close of the last century, after the visit of Princess Amelia in 1798; it was subsequently visited by the Princess Charlotte and Queen Caroline, and in 1849 by the late Queen Dowager and suite, who stayed here for a fortnight. The town is well laid out, and has several good streets, with an iron pier, 960 feet long by 15 wide, at the bottom of South-street, erected in 1862 at a cost of £4,182. The Steyne consists of about 3 acres of ornamental grounds, fronting Warwick and Worthing Houses, which are let out in apartments. The corn-exchange is close to the railway station, and the assembly-rooms are attached to the Steyne Hotel; there are also subscription-libraries, news-rooms, theatre built in 1807, two branch banks, savings-bank, market opened in 1810, union poorhouse, and a dispensary. The population in 1861 was 6,550. Many of the people are employed in the mackerel and herring fishery for the supply of the London market. The town is under the management of a local board of health, and in the charge of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions here. It is a polling-place for West Sussex, and a coast-guard station, also the head of a new county court and superintendent registry district. The livings of both churches in the town are perpet. curs. in the archdeac. and dioc. of Chichester, val. respectively £150 and £300, in the gift of the Rector of Broadwater. The chapel-of-ease was erected in 1812, and Christchurch in 1843. A new church is being built, to be dedicated to St. George. The greater part of the sittings in the latter are free. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Christian Brethren have chapels. There are National schools, some of which have been recently built, and two sets of almshouses, St. Elizabeth's for four single women, and Humphreys, built in 1858, for six aged men and their wives. On Lancing Down are traces of a Roman camp, and at Cisbury of a British earthwork covering 60 acres. Market-day is Saturday, and a corn-market fortnightly on Wednesday.

WORTHING, a par. in the hund. of Launditch, co. Norfolk, 4 miles N.E. of East Dereham, and half a mile from Elmham railway station. It is watered by a stream falling into the river Wensum. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, joint val., with that of Swanton Morley, £1,065. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret.

WORTHING CHRISTCHURCH, an ecclesiastical district in the par. of Broadwater, co. Sussex, adjoining the town of Worthing.

WORTHINGTON, a chplry. in the par. of Breedon-on-the-Hill, hund. of West Goscote, co. Leicester, 4½ miles N.E. of Ashby-de-la-Zouch. It comprises the three tnshps. of Griffydam, Newbold, and Worthington, and the hmlt. of Pegg's Green, at which last is a colliery. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £100. The church is dedicated to St. Matthew. The Wesleyans have two chapels, one at Worthington, and the other at Griffydam. There are National and church schools. Earl Ferrers is lord of the manor.

WORTHINGTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Standish, co. Lancaster, 3 miles N. of Wigan, near the Leeds and Liverpool canal.

WORTH-MATRAVERS, a par. in the hund. of Rowbarrow, co. Dorset, 3 miles S.E. of Corfe Castle, and 3 S.W. of Swanage. It is situated on the coast of the English Channel, and contains the hmlts. of Downshay, Eastington, Haycroft, Quar, Rentscombe, Weston, and Woody-Hide, at which last is a quarry of green marble, of which pillars have been erected in many of the cathedrals, and recently employed for the decoration of the Temple church in London. There are also quarries of Purbeck and freestone. Overlooking the English Channel is St. Alban's Head, formed by a spur of the Middle Purbecks, which rises 450 feet above the level of the sea, and has on its summit a signal-house, also the remains of an old chapel, dedicated to St. Aldhelm or St. Alban, built and vaulted with stone, and supported by a single massive pillar. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £150, in the patron. of the Rector of Swanage. The church is dedicated to St. Nicholas.

WORTH, WEST, a tythg. in the par. of Edmondsham, co. Dorset, 2 miles S.E. of Cranborne.

WORTHY, HEADBOURN, a par. in the lower div. of Fawley hund., co. Hants, 1½ mile N. of Winchester. The village is situated on the river Itchen, which is navigable from Winchester to Southampton. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £420, in the patron. of University College, Oxford. The church is dedicated to St. Martin. There is a National school. The charities produce about £7. Joseph Bingham, the ecclesiastical historian, author of "Origines Ecclesiasticæ," was once rector.

WORTHY MARTYR. See MARTYR-WORTHY, co. Hants.

WORTING, a par. in the hund. of Chutely, co. Hants, 2 miles W. of Basingstoke. The village is situated near the line of the London and South-Western railway. The surface is undulating, and the soil chalky. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £280. The church, dedicated to Thomas à Becket, has been recently rebuilt. There is a National school, and almshouses for two poor families. The Rev. L. B. Wither is lord of the manor.

WORTLEY, a tythg. in the par. of Wotton-under-Edge, co. Gloucester, 1 mile S.E. of Wotton.

WORTLEY, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of St. Peter's, Leeds, ward of Holbeck, West Riding co. York, 2 miles S.W. of Leeds, within which borough it is comprised, and 6½ from Bradford. The Leeds and Bradford and the Leeds and Dewsbury railways have both stations here. The tnshp. contains the modern suburb of New Wortley, adjoining Wellington Bridge, the vils. of Lower and Upper Wortley, Greenside, and Silver Royd Hill, with some scattered hmlts. The population has rapidly increased of late years, and in 1861 contained 12,058 inhabitants, but the ecclesiastical district of New Wortley contains 7,334. The working classes are chiefly employed in the woollen manufacture, the potteries, and coalpits, and in the making of sanitary tubes and fire-bricks. The soil is fertile, and the commons have been recently enclosed. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £130. The church, dedicated to St. John, was built in 1787, but not consecrated till 1813. The Wesleyans, Independents, Primitive and Association Methodists, have chapels. There are a free school and National schools.

WORTLEY, a tnshp. and vil. in the par. of Tankersley, upper div. of Staincross wap., West Riding co. York, 8½ miles N. of Sheffield, its post town, and 7 S.W. of Barnsley. It has stations on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, Great Northern, and London and North-Western railways. The tnshp. is separated on the W. from Bradfield and part of the parish of Penistone by the river Don, and includes the hmlts. of Bromley, Finkle Street, Hermit Hill, Howbrook, and Smithy Folds. The chief seats are Wharncliffe Hall, the seat of Lord Wharncliffe, who is lord of the manor, and Wharncliffe Lodge, for many generations the seat of the Wortley family; the latter was built in 1510 by Sir Thomas Wortley, ancestor of the Hon. Edward Montague and the Lady Mary Wortley Montague. Near the old seat are Wharncliffe crags, the scene of the ballad of the Dragon of Wantley. The soil is clayey, and the substratum abounds in coal, ironstone, and gritstone. There are collieries, iron and steel works, agricultural implement factories, brick and tile kilns, and stone quarries. The Wharncliffe Silkstone Company have their works here. The population in 1857 was 1,095, and in 1861 it was 1,121. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York, val. £120. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, was partially rebuilt in 1815. There are a public library, a National school-house, erected by Lord Wharncliffe in 1861, and a Sunday-school. The charities produce about £35 per annum.

WORTLEY, KING'S, a par. in the hunds. of Lower Fawley and Mitcheldever, co. Hants, 2 miles N.E. of Winchester. It is situated in the vale of the river Itchen, and includes the tythg. of Abbot's Worthy. The London and South-Western railway passes through the parish. The land, which is chiefly arable, is the property of Sir F. T. Baring, Bart., and G. E. Wall, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The soil is chalky. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £460. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, has been recently enlarged and repaired. The register commences in the early part of the 16th century. The Wesleyans have a chapel, and there is a National school.

WORTON, a tythg. and ecclesiastical district in the par. and hund. of Potterne, co. Wilts, 3½ miles S.W. of Devizes. It is situated near the bank of the Thames, and has recently been formed into a separate ecclesiastical district.

WORTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Cassington, hund. of Wootton, co. Oxford, 4 miles N.W. of Oxford.

WORTON, a hmlt. in the tnshp. of Bainbridge, and par. of Aysgarth, North Riding co. York, 2 miles S.W. of Askrigg, in Wensley Dale, near a branch of the river Ure.

WORTON, NETHER and OVER, pars. in the hund. of Wootton, co. Oxford, 4 miles S.W. of Deddington. They are watered by the river Swere, a branch of the Cherwell. The churches are dedicated respectively to St. James and the Holy Trinity.

WORTWELL, a hmlt. in the par. of Redenhall, hund. of Earsham, co. Norfolk, 2½ miles N.E. of Harleston. It is a station on the Waveney Valley railway. The village or hamlet was formerly extra parochial, situated near the river Waveney. Redenhall church and churchyard are partly within the bounds of Wortwell. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There is a National school.

WOTHERSOME, a tnshp. in the par. of Bardsey, lower div. of Skyrack wap., West Riding co. York, 4 miles S. of Wetherby.

WOTHERTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Chirbury, co. Salop, 8 miles N.W. of Bishop's Castle.

WOTHORPE, a tnshp. in the par of St. Martin's, Stamford-Baron, co. Northampton, 1 mile W. of Stamford-Baron. It is situated near the river Welland, and contains the ruins of Wothorpe Hall, built by Lord Burleigh in the reign of Elizabeth.

WOTTON, a hund. in two divs., co. Surrey; the first contains the pars. of Abinger, Ockley, and Wotton; and the second, the pars. of Capel and Dorking, comprising together about 32,600 acres.

WOTTON, a par. in the hund. of the same name, co. Surrey, 3 miles S.W. of Dorking. It is situated on the border of Sussex, and is about 9 miles in extent from N. to S., but seldom exceeds a mile in breadth, tapering towards the S. It comprises the divs. of Low Hill and Up Hill, and until recently the chplry. of Oakwood, which last has been formed with part of the parish of Abinger into a separate ecclesiastical district, having its own church and schools. The surface is hilly, including Leith Hill, the loftiest elevation in the S.E. of England, being 997 feet above sea level, and having on its summit a square tower, erected in 1766 by R. Hall, Esq., commanding an extensive view over the Woulds of Surrey and Sussex, with the English Channel in the distance to the S., and the hills of Harrow, Hampstead, and Highgate, to the N. Under Leith Hill rise three streams, two of which fall into the river Wey, and one into the Arun. There are considerable woods of oak, ash, beech, hazel, and birch. The principal landed proprietors are the Duke of Norfolk, who owns the Tillingbourne estate, W. J. Evelyn, Esq., M.P. and lord of the manor, whose seat is Wotton Park, which has part of the old Elizabethan mansion, where John Evelyn, author of "Sylva," was born in 1620; Lee Steere, Esq., of Javes House; Josiah Wedgwood, Esq.; and Sir E. Vaughan Williams, of Tanhurst near Leith Hill. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £548. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, has recently been repaired. In the interior are monuments to the Evelyn family. There is also a district church at Oakwood Hill. The charities produce about £40 per annum, including the bequest of Lady Evelyn for the poor.

WOTTON. See WOOTTON, cos. Gloucester and Hants.

WOTTON-UNDER-EDGE, a par., tnshp., and market town in the upper div. of Berkeley hund., co. Gloucester, formerly in Wilts, 19 miles S.W. of Gloucester, 7 S. of Dursley, and 2 from the Charfield station on the Gloucester and Bristol railway, which passes through the parish. This place derives its name from its situation beneath the western ridge of the Cotswold hills, and was once of more importance than at present, being one of the clothing towns, and having flourishing manufactures of fine woollen cloth, which are now entirely decayed. In the reign of John, it was destroyed by fire, but was rebuilt on a different site by the Berkeleys, who obtained for it from Henry III. the grant of a market and fairs, with various municipal privileges. A mayor is still chosen annually in October at the manorial court leet, but he has no magisterial authority, nor have the 12 aldermen, the town being under the government of county magistrates, who hold petty sessions for the division fortnightly on Friday. It is an election and polling place for West Gloucestershire. The par., which is watered by the Bourn, Edbrook, Dyers Brook, and the Ousel, contains besides the town of Wotton, the hmlts. of Bradley, Coombe, Horseley, Huntingford, Sinwell, and Symondshall. The present town, which consists principally of two parallel streets, is well built, and lighted with gas. It has a branch bank, savings bank, literary institution, subscription library and reading-rooms, and several water mills. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £115, in the patron. of the dean and canons of Christ Church, Oxford, who are impropriators. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is a handsome structure, and contains several monuments. The Tabernacle meeting-house, originally built in 1775 by Rowland Hill, joining the house where his wife died, has been rebuilt in a more pretentious style. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Baptists have chapels. The free grammar school, the oldest public school in the kingdom, was founded in 1387 by Lady Berkeley, and has an income from endowment of about £500 per annum, with exhibitions at Oxford and Cambridge. There are a blue-coat school, in which thirty boys are clothed and taught, National school for girls, and British and infant schools. The charities realise above £1,200 per annum, including the endowments of the schools and almshouses, of which there are two sets, Perry's and Dawes', the former for 12 and the latter for 6 poor persons. The Roman road from Cirencester goes through the parish, and there are remains of British and Roman camps and Roman buildings. Market-day is Friday. Fairs are held 25th September, and on the Tuesday preceding 25th March, and there is a monthly market the first Tuesday in the month.

WRAGBY, a par. and market town in the W. div. of Wraggoe wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 11 miles N.E. of Lincoln, 10 N.W. of Horncastle, and 8 from Market Rasen. It has a station at Langworth on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway, and is 6 miles from the Bardney station of the Lincoln and Boston branch of the Great Northern railway. Wragby is a polling place for the county elections, and a small market town, situated at the junction of the Lincoln, Horncastle, Louth, Market Rasen, and Bardney roads, containing in 1861 a population of only 619. It is noticed by Leland as a village giving name to a small beck or stream which passed by Bardney Abbey, but was raised into importance about 1671 by the Duke of Buckingham, who obtained for it the grant of a market and fairs. The living is a vic.* united with the rect. of Panton, joint val. £150. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was rebuilt in 1838 at a cost of £3,500. The chancel of the old church is left standing, and serves as the cemetery chapel. The charities produce about £140 per annum, including the endowment of Hansard's grammar school, now united with the parochial school, and Turnor's almshouses for 12 widows. Market day is on Thursday. Fairs are held on 1st May and 28th and 29th September for cattle and sheep. C. Turnor, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WRAGBY, a par. chiefly in the upper div. of Osgoldcross wap., but partly in the wap. of Staincross, West Riding co. York, 4 miles S.W. of Pontefract, 5 S.E. of Wakefield, and 3¼ S.E. of Oakenshaw railway station, on the North Midland line of railway. The par. comprises the tnshps. of West Hardwick, Hessle, Hill Top, Huntwick, and Nostel-cum-Foulby, in the wap. of Upper Osgoldcross, and the tnshps. of Ryhill and Wintersett, in that of Staincross. The village has on its northern side the park and mansion of Charles Wynn, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The mansion is built on the site of a monastery dedicated to St. Oswald, and founded in 1121 by Ralph Adlove, chaplain to Henry I., for canons regular. In the township of West Hardwick bricks, tiles, and pipes are made, and there are also stone quarries, and in the parish a seam of good coal has been discovered. The living is a don. cur. The church is dedicated to St. Michael. There are parochial schools partially endowed. The charities produce about £23 per annum.

J. B. S. Bradfield, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WREXHAM, a par., market town, parliamentary and municipal borough recently incorporated, but locally in the hund. of Bromfield, co. Denbigh, 12 miles from Chester, 22 S.E. of Denbigh, and 179 N.W. of London by road, or 185 by the North-Western and Shrewsbury and Chester railways, on which it is a station. It is situated in a mineral district on the borders of Flintshire, into which county the parish extends, including the tnshps. of Wrexham Abbot, Wrexham Regis, and Esclusham, which form the borough, together with the chplries. of Berse Drelincourt, Brymbo, and Minera, besides ten other tnshps. The town of Wrexham is a thriving and increasing place on the Gwenfrwy brook, a feeder of the Clywedog, itself an affluent of the river Dee. It is one of the oldest towns in North Wales, being mentioned in the Saxon chronicles as Wrightesham or Wrightelesham, a strong place on the Mercian border, and after the conquest of Wales by Edward I. was granted to Earl Warren by the name of Welsh Maelor. It is described by Leland as containing "sum merchauntes and good bokeler makers," and subsequently, in the civil war of Charles I., it was occupied by the Roundheads, who turned the church into a prison. By the Reform Act of 1832 it was created a parliamentary borough contributory to Denbigh, and since 1851 has received a charter of incorporation. The population of the parish in 1861 was 9,904, and of the borough 7,562, inhabiting 1,442 houses. The town consists of several wide streets, well paved and lighted, crossing each other at right angles, but the sanitary arrangements are imperfect. It contains some well-built houses and shops, also a townhall with public rooms, built of brick, the county prison or bridewell, a new market-house, an infirmary, theatre, three commercial banks, savings-bank, and literary institute. Brewing, malting, and tanning are carried on, and there is a factory for making patent flat and round ropes. The principal trade, however, is in connection with mining operations, there being a rich coalfield to the W. of the town in beds from 2 to 15 feet thick, mines of iron-stone and lead, and extensive quarries of new red sandstone within the parish. Wrexham is the head-quarters of the county militia, and seat of a new county court and superintendent registry, and the head of a Poor-law Union, comprising 56 parishes and tnshps. within the counties of Denbigh, Chester, and Flint. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here for the hundreds of Bromfield and Gale. Wrexham gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of St. Asaph. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of St. Asaph, commuted at £626, in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church, dedicated to St. Giles, is often called one of the "seven wonders" of North Wales. It occupies an elevated site near the centre of the town, from which circumstance and its great height it is visible for many miles round. The present structure was built about 1470 in the place of a previous one destroyed by fire in 1457, and which was collegiate. The body of the church is 178 feet long by 62 feet broad, with a tower 135 feet in height, surmounted by a balustrade, from which spring four lantern-shaped turrets of open-work crowning the buttresses, and on three sides of the tower are rows of saints in canopied niches, 30 figures in all. On the S. wall, near the tower, hangs a painting of King David, said to be by Rubens, and above the communion table one of the "Last Supper," presented by Governor Yale. In the chancel is the monument by Roubilliac, in marble, to the memory of Miss Myddleton of Chirk Castle, representing a female figure starting from the grave at the sound of the last trumpet; there are also two medallion monuments by the same sculptor, several ancient tombs, and much grotesque sculpture, both within and on the outside of the church, the most noteworthy being the grotesque head and armorial bearings on the corbels in the nave. The churchyard contains an unusual number of quaint epitaphs, including the well-known rhyming one of Governor Yale of Plâs Gronow, "Born in America, in Europe bred, in Africa travelled, and in Asia wed." There are besides a district church, chapels-of-ease at Berse Drelincourt, Brymbo, and Minera, a Roman Catholic chapel, and eleven chapels belonging to various dissenting bodies. The charities produce about £800 per annum, of which £50 belong to the Presbyterian chapel, and £15 to the grammar school founded in 1603. There are also National, Roman Catholic, and Sunday schools. Near the town is an oval course of nearly a mile, on which races take place annually in October. Market days are Thursday and Saturday. Fairs are held on the third Thursday in January, 23rd March, 6th April, Holy Thursday, 16th June, 7th August, 19th September, 29th October, third Thursday in November, and second Thursday in December.

WRIGHTINGTON, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Eccleston, hund. of Leyland, co. Lancaster, 5 miles N.W. of Wigan, and half a mile from Appley Bridge railway station. It is situated near the Liverpool canal and the river Douglas. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in cotton spinning and in the collieries. The principal residences are Wrightlington Hall and Harrock Hall, the former an old seat of the Scarisbrick family. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £110, in the patron. of the Rector of Eccleston. The Roman Catholics, Independents, and Primitive Methodists have chapels.

WRINEHILL WITH CHECKLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Wybunbury, hund. of Nantwich, co. Chester, 7 miles S.E. of Nantwich.

WRINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Brent-with-Wrington, co. Somerset, 7 miles N.E. of Axbridge, 10 S.W. of Bristol, and 4 S.E. of Yatton railway station. The par., which includes the chplries. of Broadfield and Burrington, is situated in a country watered by the river Yeo, and sheltered by the Mendip Hills. The village, formerly a market town under charter of Edward II., is built on the slope of a hill on the road from Bristol to Bridgwater, and consists chiefly of two streets intersecting obliquely, and a number of detached houses. Petty sessions are held on the first Monday in each month. There are a literary institution with reading-room and library, and a savings-bank. Mill puff and flock are manufactured here. About three-quarters of a mile to the E. of the village is Barley Wood, where is the thatched cottage-ornée built by the late Mrs. Hannah More and her sister, and in which she resided for twenty-five years. John Locke was born here in 1632 at a thatched house on the N. side of the churchyard, now partly occupied as a school. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells. The church is dedicated to All Saints. There is also a chapel-of-ease called Christ Church at Red Hill, built in 1844. The Independents and Wesleyans have chapels. The National schools were erected in 1857 at a cost of £1,500; there are besides infant and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £30 per annum, including a small endowment for the schools. A fair formerly held on the 9th September is now discontinued.

WRITHLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Kilmersdon, co. Somerset, 6 miles N.W. of Frome. It is situated on the Bath canal, and an affluent of the Avon, abounding with trout and eels. The surface is hilly, and the soil chiefly clay on a substratum of oolite. There are extensive collieries, quarries of white freestone, and beds of fuller's earth. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £170, in the patron. of the Prebendary of Writhlington in the cathedral of Salisbury. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene.

WRITTLE, a par. and town in the hund. of Chelmsford, co. Essex, 2½ miles S.W. of Chelmsford. The parish is on the road from Chelmsford to Ongar, near the river Cam, a feeder of the Chelmer. It is supposed to have been the site of the Roman station Cæsaromagus, mentioned by Antonine, and has the remains of a royal palace built by John in 1211, which covered an acre of ground surrounded by a deep moat. In the Saxon times the manor was held by Harold, and after the Conquest came to the Albinis, William Longsword, Thomas de Woodstock, and the Earls of Stafford, and was given by Queen Mary to Lord Petre, to whose lineal descendants it still belongs. It had formerly a market, but declined with the increasing prosperity of Chelmsford, but malting and brewing are still carried on, and there is an oil mill. Courts leet and baron are held annually, and the inhabitants enjoy the privilege of choosing their own coroner. Races take place in July. A peculiar custom called Leppe and Lasse formerly prevailed in this parish, by which the lord of the manor was entitled to levy a toll of 4*d.* on every cart coming to Greenbury not belonging to a peer. The par. includes several small hmlts. and uninclosed plots, called Love's Green, Highwood, Ebney Common, Cookmill, Newney Green, and Oxney Green, which are all about to be enclosed. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £600, paid by stipend from New College, Oxford, who are owners of the tithes. The church, dedicated to All Saints, formerly belonged to Bermondsey Abbey. It was partially rebuilt in 1802, and contains numerous monuments, including one to Baron Conyers, who built Highlands. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Love's Green, dedicated to St. Paul. There are National schools with a small endowment, and almshouses for 6 poor people founded by Hawkins and Hunt. The charities produce about £180 per annum.

WROCKWARDINE, a par. in the Wellington div. of South Bradford hund., co. Salop, 2 miles S.W. of Wellington, 10 E. of Shrewsbury, and half a mile from the Admaston railway station. The par. comprises the tnshps. of Admaston, Allscote, Bratton, Burcott, Clottley, Cluddley, Charlton, Leaton, Long Lane, Wrockwardine, and Wrockwardine Wood. The substratum abounds in coal and ironstone, which are principally worked in the tnshp. of Wrockwardine Wood, now constituted a separate ecclesiastical district. The village is situated on ground adjoining a by-road leading from Watling Street turnpike road, and commands a prospect over the surrounding country, including the vale of Salop, the Breddyn hills in North Wales, and the plains of Cheshire, with the hills of Derbyshire in the distance. The manufacture of glass is carried on, and there is a corn-mill on the river Tern, which bounds the parish on the N. In the township of Wrockwardine Wood the Shrewsbury canal passes, and in that of Admaston is a mineral spring with hotel and baths attached. The water contains muriate of soda, a small portion of muriate of lime with iron, and hepatic air. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £400, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, has recently been restored. In the chancel are a painted E. window representing the Saviour, and several monumental tablets. There are National schools for boys and girls, both here and at Wrockwardine, and almshouses for 6 poor persons, built and endowed in 1841. The charities produce about £38 per annum.

WROCKWARDINE-WOOD, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Wrockwardine, co. Salop 4 miles W. of Wellington, 5 from Newport, 1 mile from Oaken Gates railway station, and 5 miles from the village of Wrockwardine. A branch of the Shropshire Union canal, which communicates with the Severn, passes through the township. The substratum abounds with coal and ironstone, which are extensively worked by the Lilleshall company on lease from the Duke of Sutherland. The tnshp. includes the hmlts. of Frenchland and the Nabbs. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £140. The church has recently been repaired. The Primitive and Reformed Methodists have chapels. There are National schools.

WROOT, a par. in the W. div. of Manley wap., parts of Lindsey, co. Lincoln, 9 miles N.E. of Bawtry, and 4½ S.W. of Epworth, in the Isle of Axholme, near the river Idle. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £400. The church is dedicated to St. Pancras. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. Travis's free schools for boys and girls have an endowment of £115 per annum. John Harvey, Esq., is lord of the manor.

WROPTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Forden, co. Montgomery, 3 miles N. of Montgomery.

WROSE, a hmlt. in the chplry. of Idle, West Riding co. York, 3 miles N.E. of Bradford.

WROTHAM, a hund. in the lathe of Aylesford co

Kent, contains the pars. of Ightham, Shipborne, Stanstead, and Wrotham, comprising 16,140 acres.

WROTHAM, a par. and town in the hund. of the same name, co. Kent, 10 miles N.W. of Maidstone, 8 N.E. of Sevenoaks, and 5½ from the Meopham station of the London, Chatham, and Dover railway. It is situated under the chalk hills, and includes the district chplries. of Platt, Plaxtol, and Woodlands, which last was formerly a par. of itself, besides seven hmlts. The town, which is at the foot of Wrotham hill, consists principally of two streets crossing each other on the road from London to Maidstone, and in the centre is the market-place, where was a public well, now filled up. It is supposed to have been originally a British town, and was afterwards a Roman station on the military way from Oldborough to Stane Street. In 904 it was presented by Athelstane to the monastery of Christ Church, Canterbury, and has still the terrace and gateway of a palace of the archbishops, who resided here till Islip pulled it down. At the Dissolution, the manor was surrendered by Cranmer to Henry VIII., and came from the Byngs to James of Ightham. There are paper mills at Basted, and hops are extensively cultivated. The living comprises a sinecure rectory and a vic.* in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £1,000, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church, dedicated to St. George, is of the 13th century, consisting of nave, N. and S. aisles, S. porch, and parvise with large chancel. In the interior are many brasses, the earliest bearing date 1470, and tombs of Burgoyne, Peckham, and Rayner. The whole edifice has been recently restored at the expense of the rector, the Rev. Charles Lane, and has a stone pulpit, carved by Seale of Walworth. The chancel also has been enriched by a large E. window of five lights, containing eleven subjects illustrative of the Apostles' Creed. On its N. and S. sides are four "Evangelist" windows with the twelve Apostles in stained glass, by Ward and Hughes of London. There are besides district churches at Platt, Plaxtol, and Woodlands, which last place has recently been formed into a district chapelry, together with a portion of the woodlands of Shoreham parish. There are National and Sunday schools, and almshouses for 8 poor persons, endowed by Miss Helen Bettenson. A fair is held on the 4th May.

WROTTESLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Tettenhall, S. div. of Seisdon hund., co. Stafford, 2 miles W. of Tettenhall, and 4½ N.W. of Wolverhampton. It consists chiefly of the estate and mansion of Lord Wrottesley, whose ancestors have possessed it since the first year of Henry III., when they obtained it from Evesham Abbey in exchange for Moreton. The present hall is an edifice of the 17th century, built upon an eminence, which rises above the banks of the Smestall rivulet. It gives name and title of baron to Lord Wrottesley, and forms a prebend in the collegiate church of St. Michael, Tettenhall, attached to which is Wrottesley chancel, containing several monuments to the Wrottesley family, including two illuminated brasses to the two sons of the present Lord Wrottesley, one of whom fell in action against the Caffres, and the other at the attack on Bomarsund. Near the present village are vestiges of an ancient city, supposed to be of British or Roman origin, from 3 to 4 miles in circuit, with streets at right angles, and within its limits, ruins of an ancient tower, built of huge square stones.

WROUGHTON, a par. in a detached portion of the hund. of Elstob, co. Wilts, 3 miles S.W. of Swindon, and 9 N. of Marlborough. It is comprised within the parliamentary borough of Cricklade, and includes the tythgs. of Elcombe, Overtown, Salthrop, and Westlecott. The upper portion of the parish is principally arable, with some sheep-walks, but the lower lands are chiefly in dairy farms, on which considerable quantities of cheese are made. The soil is in parts loamy and in others clay. The principal seats are Wroughton House and Salthrop Lodge. The Wilts and Berks canal and the Great Western railway pass in the vicinity. The living consists of a sinecure rect. in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester, and of a vic.,* val. £160, in the patron. of the rector. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist and St. Helen, is of the 11th century. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There is a National school with a small endowment, now held in an old chapel near the church. In this parish are remains of a British encampment called Barbary Castle. The Dean and Chapter of Winchester and W. Wyndham Codrington, Esq., are lords of the manor.

WROXALL, a hmlt. in the par. of Newchurch, Isle of Wight, co. Hants, 7 miles S.E. of Newport, and 2 from Ventnor.

WROXALL. See WROXHALL, co. Warwick.

WROXETER, a par. in the Wellington div. of South Bradford hund., co. Salop, 5¾ miles S.E. of Shrewsbury. The par., which is bounded on the W. by the Severn, comprises the tnshps. of Donnington, Dryton, Eyton, Norton, and Rushton. The soil is generally a rich loam, alternated with gravel, and the substratum contains coal, which is partially worked. The village appears once to have been a place of importance, and takes its name from an ancient British town called Caer Vrauch, and by the Saxons Wrekinceastre, from its situation near the Wrekin mountain. It is the Uriconium of Antoninus, and the Viriconium of Ptolemy, an important Roman station on the north-eastern bank of the Severn, at Wroxeter Ford, where the Roman way Watling Street crossed the river, and near which may be seen at low water huge blocks of stone, supposed to have once formed a bridge. The remains which still exist show that the city walls were 9 feet in thickness, and extended for 3 miles in circumference, surrounded by a rampart and fosse; it flourished for a considerable time as the capital of the Cornavii, but was devastated by the Saxons and Danes. In 1752 several Roman inscriptions, now preserved at Shrewsbury, were found here, also urns, a seal, and silver coins of Vespasian, Antoninus, Trajan, and later emperors; and important excavations have been going on for some years, under the direction of Thomas Wright, Esq., who has published a "Guide to Uriconium." The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £400. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, contains monuments to Chief Justice Bromley and the Newport family. There is a free grammar school, situated at Donnington, in this parish, founded by Thomas Alcock in 1627, and presented by Mrs. Careswell with two exhibitions at Christ Church College, Oxford. The charities produce about £58 per annum, including the school endowment. The Duke of Cleveland is lord of the manor and patron of the living, and Lord Berwick has a large property in the parish.

WROXHALL, a par. in the Snitterfield div. of Barlichway hund., co. Warwick, 6 miles N.W. of Warwick, and 4 from Kenilworth railway station. The village is situated near the Birmingham canal. The surface is undulating, and the soil chiefly a strong clay. The principal residence is Wroxhall Abbey, originally built by Robert Burgoyne, to whom the demesne was granted by Henry VIII. at the dissolution of the monasteries, and in 1713 was purchased by Sir Christopher Wren from the family of Burgoyne, and is now the seat of Chandos Wren Hoskyns, Esq. The living is a don. cur. in the dioc. of Worcester. The church of St. Leonard is part of the abbey founded by Hugh de Hatton in the reign of Henry I. for Benedictine nuns, the revenue of which at the Dissolution was valued at £78 10*s.* 1*d.* It forms one side of the quadrangle of Wroxhall Abbey, and contains monuments to the Wren family, and a brass bearing date 1430, brought from Brailes church. The charities produce about £130 per annum, including the poors' estate.

WROXHAM, a par. in the hund. of Taverham, co. Norfolk, 7 miles N.E. of Norwich. The village is situated on the banks of the navigable river Bure, over which is a bridge. There are three small lakes or ponds. The living is a vic.

WROXTON, a par. in the hund. of Bloxham, co.

Oxford, 25 miles N.W. of Oxford, and 3 from Banbury. The par. includes the hmlt. and chplry. of Balscot, and had formerly an Austin priory founded in the reign of Henry III. for a prior and six canons, the revenue of which at the Dissolution was £78 14*s.* 8½*d.* On its suppression part of the buildings were demolished, and the demesne given to Sir Thomas Pope, founder of Trinity College, Oxford, but in 1618 the structure was rebuilt by William Pope, first Earl of Downe, in which some arches and other remains of the original building are incorporated. This mansion, the seat of Lieutenant-Colonel and the Baroness North, contains a collection of family portraits. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val., with the cur. of Balscot annexed, £137. The church, dedicated to All Saints, occupies elevated ground near the abbey. At the W. end of the nave is an old font with figures of six of the apostles, and in the chancel is an altar tomb of alabaster, with recumbent effigies of Sir W. Pope, Earl of Downe, and his lady, in the costume of the early part of the 17th century, also monuments to the earls of Guilford and to the Norths, including one to Lord North the premier. There is also a chapel-of-ease at Balscot. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels, and there are National schools. The charities produce about £35, chiefly the produce of church lands.

WUERDLE WITH WARDLE, a tnshp. in the par. of Rochdale, hund. of Salford, co. Lancaster, 2 miles N.E. of Rochdale, of which it is a large and populous suburb, containing the chplry. of Smallbridge. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton mills and mines.

WYASTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Edlaston, co. Derby, 2 miles S. of Ashborne.

WYBERTON, a par. in the wap. of Kirton, parts of Holland, co. Lincoln, 2 miles S. of Boston. It is situated near the river Witham, and includes the hmlt. of West End. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lincoln, val. £600. The church is dedicated to St. Leodegar. The Wesleyans have a chapel at West End. The charities produce about £40 per annum.

WYBOSTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Eaton Socon, co. Beds, 3 miles S.W. of St. Neot's, near the river Ouse.

WYBUNBURY, a par. in the hund. of Nantwich, co. Chester, 3½ miles E. of Nantwich. It is situated on the turnpike road from Nantwich to Newcastle and Woore, in Shropshire, and traversed on the eastern boundary by the London and North-Western railway, which has a station at Basford. The par., which contains 20,360 acres and 4,985 inhabitants, comprises the chplries. of Doddington, or Hunsterson, and Weston, with the tnshps. of Bartherton, Basford, Blakenhall, Bridgemere, Checkley - cum - Wrinehill, Chorlton, Doddington, Hatherton, Hough, Hunsterson, Lea, Rope, Shavington-cum-Gresly, Staperley, Walgherton, Weston, Wybunbury, and part of Willaston. The soil is loam and clay. Doddington Hall is in the occupation of Henry Akroyd, Esq. There are numerous ancient seats and halls in the parish. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Chester, val. £230, with 12½ acres of glebe, in the patron. of the Bishop of Lichfield. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, was rebuilt in 1595, and again in 1832, with the exception of the tower, which is 96 feet high, and having fallen 6 feet out of the perpendicular during the lapse of several centuries, was rectified in 1833, and contains 6 bells. The church has a carved roof and a stained E. window, and in the interior are several brasses and monuments of the Delves of Doddington, the Smiths of the Hough, the Lees of Lea Hall, now a farmhouse, and of the Breretons. There are, besides, chapels-of-ease at Hunsterson and Weston. The Wesleyans have chapels at Wybunbury and Chorlton. There are National and free schools. The charities produce about £270 per annum, including school endowments, an hospital dedicated to the Holy Cross, and St. George, for a master and brethren, existed here before 1464, and after the Dissolution came from the Praers to the Bishops of Lichfield. Sir H. Delves Broughton, Bart., is lord of the manor and principal proprietor.

WYCHLING. See WITCHLING, co. Kent.

WYCKS, BISHOP, and WYCKS UFFORD, hmlts. in the par. of St. Clement's, Ipswich, co. Suffolk, adjoining Ipswich.

WYCLIFFE, a par. in the wap. of Gilling-West, North Riding co. York, 2½ miles N.E. of Greta-Bridge, and 8 N.W. of Richmond. It is situated on the banks of the Tees, comprising the tnshps. of Thorpe and Wycliffe, and is said to be the birth-place, in 1324, of Wycliffe, whose family were settled here from the Conquest down to 1606. The soil is loamy and well cultivated. Wycliffe Hall is the residence of G. Sowerby, Esq. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £500. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The Roman Catholics have a chapel. The charities produce about £3 per annum. Sir T. A. C. Constable, Bart., of Burton Constable, is lord of the manor.

WYCOMB, a hmlt. in the par. of Rothley, hund. of East Goscote, co. Leicester, 4½ miles N.E. of Melton-Mowbray.

WYCOMBE, HIGH, or CHIPPING, a par., market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, in the hund. of Desborough, co. Bucks, 28 miles S.E. of Buckingham, and 29 from London by road, or by the Great Western railway, which communicates with this town by a branch from Maidenhead. It is situated in a valley watered by the river Wye, which joins the Thames below Wooburn, about 6 miles S. of Wycombe. The par., which comprises 6,380 acres, includes, besides the town and borough of Wycombe, the chplries. of Hazlemere and Loudwater. High Wycombe, as the town is commonly designated, probably occupies the site of a Roman settlement—from the discovery of Roman tesselated pavements, coins, and other antiquities, and the existence of an ancient encampment, about a mile to the westward, called Desborough Castle, which gives name to the hundred, and is supposed to be of Roman or Danish origin. It was a market town in the time of the Saxons, and was given by Edward the Confessor to his queen Editha as part of her dower. After the Conquest the manor was divided, and was held by the Bassets, Viponts, Marshalls, Bohuns, and other families. The town was incorporated either in the reign of Edward III. or Henry VI., and has returned two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I. By Edward IV. it was presented to the Dean and Canons of Windsor, and was held by the parliamentarians in 1643, when attacked by the royalists under Prince Rupert. The boundaries of the parliamentary borough were enlarged by the Reform Act of 1832, so as to take in the whole of the parish, and under the new municipal Act the town is governed by a mayor, 4 aldermen, 12 councillors, and a town clerk. For the purposes of sitting in petty sessions three additional justices, independent of the corporation, were appointed by the lord chancellor in 1852, to join with the mayor and ex-mayor, who is always a justice for the borough. The population in 1851 was 7,179, and in 1861 8,373, inhabiting 1,703 houses, but the municipal borough contained only 826 houses and 4,221 inhabitants. The town, which contains many well-built houses, and is lighted with gas, principally consists of one long street, forming part of the high-road from London to Oxford, bordered on either side by hills rising from 150 to 200 feet, towards which several smaller streets or roads stretch out. The town is well kept by a board of commissioners appointed under a local Act. It contains a townhall and market-houses, supported on 34 stone pillars, a prison, two banks, and savings bank. There are numerous paper and corn mills along the banks of the streams, and a considerable business is done in malting and brewing. A trade almost peculiar to this town and district is maintained by the manufacture of chairs, the common sort being made from the beechwood which abounds in the neighbourhood, and the choicer and lighter sorts of walnut, cherry, and other ornamental woods, with bottoms of rush or cane. The female population are chiefly occupied in the making of lace, straw-plait, and bonnets. The county militia have their head-quarters here. Wycombe gives name to a Poor-law

Union containing 24 parishes in Buckinghamshire and 4 in Oxfordshire. It is also the seat of a new County Court and superintendent registry. The Royal Military College had a branch here till removed to Great Marlow in 1802. In the immediate vicinity of the town are Wycombe Abbey, the seat of Lord Carington, and West Wycombe Park, the seat of Sir George Dashwood, containing a good collection of paintings. Wycombe gives name to a deanery in the archdeac. of Bucks and dioc. of London. The living, now in the patronage of Lord Carington, is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £400, with residence. The Marquis of Lansdowne takes from Wycombe the titles of earl and baron. The church, dedicated to All Saints, a Norman structure built in 1273, was improved and adorned by the Earl of Shelburne in 1753, and repaired in 1827, when a Gothic window was re-opened over the great S. door. The length of the church, including the chancel, is 180 feet; the height of the nave 48 feet. In the interior are several monuments to the ancestors of Lord Lansdowne, including one to Lord Shelburne, the premier. There are besides a new church at Hazlemere, erected in 1845, and another at Tyler's Green, which is formed into a new district; another at Loudwater, and a fifth at Wycombe Marsh. The Independents, Wesleyans, Reformed Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, General and Particular Baptists, and Society of Friends have chapels. There is a free grammar school, endowed for 30 boys, which was granted to the corporation by Queen Elizabeth; and National, British, infant, and denominational Sunday schools. Market day is Friday. Fairs are held on the Monday prior to Michaelmas Day for pleasure and hiring servants, and on 28th October for cattle and horses—the wool fair being discontinued.

WYCOMBE, WEST, a par. in the hund. of Desborough, co. Bucks, 2½ miles N.W. of High Wycombe. It is situated under a woody hill on the London and Oxford road. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the making of lace and of chairs from the beech-wood, with which the district abounds. West Wycombe Park, the seat of the Dashwood family, is 300 feet long, with a picture-gallery. The soil is chiefly chalk. In the neighbourhood is an ancient camp, doubly entrenched, called Desborough Castle, from which the hundred takes its name. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £250. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is on the summit of a steep hill surrounded by trees, and was rebuilt in 1763 by Lord le Despencer. It contains some stained windows and Mosaic ornaments. Adjoining the church is the Grecian mausoleum to the memory of Sarah, Baroness le Despencer, with many memorials of the Dashwood family and others. Under the church hill runs a cave nearly half a mile in length. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels. There are National and infant schools. The charities produce about £3 per annum. Sir G. H. Dashwood, Bart., M.P. for the borough of High Wycombe, is lord of the manor.

WYDDIALL, a par. in the hund. of Edwinstree, co. Herts, 1½ mile N.E. of Buntingford. The village is mentioned in Domesday survey as Widehale, and appears to have been given by the Conqueror to Hardouin d'Escalers, ancestor of the Scaleses. It subsequently returned through the Widvilles to the crown, and having been given by Henry VIII. to the Gylds, passed to the Ellises of Wyddiall Park, a demesne close to the village. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £300. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, contains several stained-glass windows, a brass of Margaret Nevil, bearing date 1595, and monuments to the Gylld, Goulstone, and Ellis families. The register commences in 1660.

WYE, a hund. in the lathe of Scray, co. Kent, contains the pars. of Aluph Boughton, Crundale, Eastwell, Wye, and part of Brook, comprising 9,830 acres.

WYE, a par. and town in the hund. of Wye, lathe of Shepway, co. Kent, 9 miles S.W. of Canterbury, and 4 N.E. of Ashford. It is a station on the Ashford and Canterbury branch of the London and South-Eastern railway. The village is situated in the vale of the Stour, near the bridge built in 1638, and under Wye Down. The manor, which was co-extensive with the lathe in the Saxon times, formed part of the royal demesne, and after the Conquest was given by William I. as "Wi" to Battle Abbey. In 1431 Cardinal Kempe founded a college here, and upon the Dissolution, the manor having reverted to the crown, Queen Elizabeth presented it to the Hunsdons, from whom it passed to the Finches in the reign of Charles I. The Royalists had a skirmish here with Rich's men in 1648. In the neighbourhood are Wye Court, Wilmington, the Hermitage, Ollantigh, once the seat of the Thornhills, Spring-Grove, the Bretts' old seat, and Withersden, where is a mineral well. Hops are largely cultivated. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Canterbury, val. £70. The Earl of Winchilsea is impropriator of the vicarial tithes, amounting to £641, the rectorial tithes, commuted at £655 10*s.* being part of the endowment of the see of Canterbury. The church, dedicated to SS. Gregory and Martin, formerly collegiate, was rebuilt by Cardinal Kempe in the reign of Henry VI., and contained his tomb, which was smashed by the fall of the steeple in 1686. The church was partly taken down in 1701, and is consequently smaller than formerly, being principally noticeable on account of its circular chancel, containing numerous monuments. The register commences in 1564. The ancient college, now used as the school-house, is a quadrangular edifice, with a cloister and old hall; both the grammar school founded in the reign of Charles I. and Lady Thornhill's charity school, founded in 1708 for the education of 50 boys and 60 girls, are held in this building. Races take place in May. Fairs are held on 29th May and 11th October.

WYE, the Welsh Gwy, a river of the West of England, or rather South Wales, rises in the mountain of Plinlimmon, on the south-western border of Montgomeryshire, about a mile S. of the source of the Severn. The beautiful scenery begins about Rhayader, where the river Elan joins, and lower down the Wye receives a number of little tributaries called the Ython, Irvon, Edwy, Machwy or Bach-wy, and finally discharges itself into the Severn a little above the point where the latter merges into the Bristol Channel. It is navigable for small vessels to Hereford, and in winter, when there is sufficient depth of water, barges ascend within a short distance of Hay, but the vessels often have to be towed against the stream and over the shallows, generally by men. The spring tides rise to a great height at Chepstow Bridge, to which point large vessels come up, and steamers ply regularly for the conveyance of passengers between that port and Bristol. The length of the Wye is variously estimated at between 120 and 130 miles, flowing in a circuitous course between cos. Radnor and Brecon, across that of Hereford, and between those of Monmouth and Gloucester, generally in a south-eastern direction, except near Glasbury, where it turns nearly N.

WYE, a stream of co. Derby, rises under Axe Edge, and running by Buxton and Bakewell, joins the Derwent near Chatsworth, after a course of 22 miles.

WYER, or WYRE, a river of co. Lancaster, rises in moors under Wolf Fell Crag, and after being joined by the Calder falls into the Irish Sea at Fleetwood.

The soil is a mixture of clay and chalk upon a substratum of limestone rock. Wykeham Abbey, the residence of Viscount Downe, was built out of the remains of a Cistercian nunnery founded about 1153 by Pain Fitz-Osbert, the revenue of which at the Dissolution amounted to £25 17*s.* 6*d.* The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of York. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was repaired at the expense of the late R. Langley, Esq., and has a stained E. window. The Wesleyans have a chapel. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £1 per annum. Viscount Downe is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WYKEHAM, a hmlt. in the par. of Old Malton, North Riding co. York, 2 miles from Malton.

WYKEHAM. See WICKHAM, co. Hants and Lincoln.

WYKEHAM, EAST and WEST, pars. in the hund. of Louth Eske, co. Lincoln, 7 miles N.W. of Louth, on the Wolds. The livings were formerly vics. in the dioc. of Lincoln, but both the churches have long since disappeared.

WYKE-HAMON, formerly a par., now a hmlt. in the par. of Wicken, hund. of Cleley, co. Northampton. The living is consolidated with that of Wicken.

WYKEN, a par. in the county of the city of Coventry, co. Warwick, 3 miles N.E. of Coventry. It is partly in common, and has an extensive colliery worked by Messrs. Harris. The land is chiefly the property of the Earl of Craven, who is lord of the manor, and whose ancestors formerly resided at Wyken House, an old mansion, in the garden of which is the original apple-tree brought by Admiral Craven from Holland, and from which the celebrated "Wyken Pippin" has been propagated. The living is a perpet. cur. annexed to Binley, in the dioc. of Worcester.

WYKE REGIS, a par. in the above lib., co. Dorset, 1 mile S.W. of Weymouth, of which borough it forms part. The parish is situated on the coast of the English Channel, between Chesil Bank and Portland Road, and at a place called Smallmouth there is a ferry to the Isle of Portland. The village, once a market town, is in a valley open to the sea from the S.W., and sheltered by hills on the N. In this parish are Belfield House, Wyke House, and South Down Lodge. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £623, in the patron. of the bishop of Winchester. The church, dedicated to All Saints, is the mother church to Weymouth, and serves as a landmark to vessels in the English Channel. There is a National school partially endowed. The charities produce about £5 per annum. The Earl of Ilchester is lord of the manor.

WYKE REGIS AND ELWELL, a lib., locally in the hund. of Culliford Tree, Dorchester div. of co. Dorset, comprises the parish of Wyke Regis.

WYLAM, a tnshp. in the par. of Ovingham, E. div. of Tindale ward, co. Northumberland, 9 miles W. of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and 2 E. of Ovingham. It has stations on the Newcastle and Carlisle section of the North-Eastern and on the Border Counties branch of the North British railways. It is situated chiefly on the N. bank of the Tyne, over which is a bridge leading to the railway station, and to Wylam Wood, a detached portion of the tnshp. on the S. side of the river, where is a rich vein of ironstone. There are extensive collieries, stone quarries, a shot factory, and a blast furnace for the manufacture of pig-iron. At the W. end of the village is Wylam Hall, anciently a peel, or border stronghold, with its stone arch of 60 feet in length. It originally was an appurtenance to the monastery of Tynemouth, but at the Dissolution was granted to the Fenwicks, of Fenwick Tower, from whom it passed to the Blacketts, who have held the manor since the reign of Charles II. George Stephenson, the celebrated engineer, was born here in 1780. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a National school, supported by E. Algernon Blackett, Esq.

WYLDECOURT, a tythg. in the par. of Hawk church, hund. of Cerne, co. Dorset, 6 miles N. of Lyme-Regis.

WYLYE, or WILY, a par. in the hund. of Branch and Dole, co. Wilts, 11 miles W. of Salisbury, and 6 S.E. of Heytesbury, and 7 N.W. of Wilton. The par., which includes the tythg. of Deptford, is situated on the Great Western road, and is watered by the river Wylye, an affluent of the Avon. The soil is a black loam on a substratum of chalk. About a mile from the village is a British encampment called Badbury-Rings, enclosing about 17 acres, and 2 miles from Deptford Inn is Yarnbrough Castle, a large Roman encampment. Wylye gives name to a deanery in the archdeaconry and diocese of Salisbury. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £500. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, was rebuilt in 1844. There is a Dissenting chapel and a National school. The charities produce about £10 per annum. The Earl of Pembroke is lord of the manor.

WYMERING, a par. in the hund. of Portsdown, co. Hants, 4 miles E. of Fareham, 4 from Portsmouth, and 1 mile N.W. of Cosham railway station. The par., which is situated on Portsmouth Harbour, under Portsdown Hill, includes the northern end of Portsea island, the islets of Great and Little Horsea, and the vil. of Hilsea, where are the Royal Artillery barracks built in 1854, and strong lines of fortifications which have recently been greatly strengthened. The population in 1861 was 1,071. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Winchester, annexed to the rect. of Widley, joint val. £678. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, or to SS. Peter and Paul, is an ancient Norman structure. The Independents have a chapel. There is a National school, also almshouses for 4 widows, founded by Mrs. Honor Wait in the reign of Elizabeth. The charities produce £15 per annum. Thomas Thistlewaite, Esq., is lord of the manor and chief landowner.

WYMERSLEY, a hund. in co. Northampton, contains the pars. of Castle Ashby, Blisworth, Brafield, Cogenhoe, Collingtree, Courteenhall, Denton, Grendon, Hardingstone, Horton, Great and Little Houghton, Milton, Piddington, Preston Deanery, Quinton, Rothersthorpe, Whiston, Wootton, and Yardley Hastings, comprising 36,060 acres.

WYMINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Willey, co. Beds, 12 miles N.W. of Bedford, and 3½ S.W. of Higham Ferrars. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £160. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a structure of the 14th century, said to have been built by John Curteys, lord of the manor, and mayor of the staple at Calais. In the interior are stalls, a stone font, and several brasses.

WYMONDHAM, a par. in the hund. of Framland, co. Leicester, 6 miles E. of Melton-Mowbray. This old village is situated near the Oakham canal and river Eye, and is surrounded by its ancient walls. The surface is undulating, and the soil a mixture of clay and loam. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £400, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a free school, founded and endowed by Sir John Sedley, in 1637, with an estate now producing £130 per annum.

WYMONDHAM, a par. and market town in the hund. of Forehoe, co. Norfolk, 10 miles S.W. of Norwich, and 100 from London by road, or 115½ by the Great Eastern railway, which has a junction station here where the Dereham branch turns off. It is situated on the river Yare, including the town of Wymondham and the "out-soken" composed of Downham, Market Street, Silfield, Suton, Town Green, and Wattlefield. It anciently belonged to William de Albini, who in 1130 founded a cell here to St. Alban's Abbey, endowing it with the wrecks on the coast and 2,000 eels from Helgay. In the 15th century the cell grew into an independent abbey, and at the Dissolution its revenues were returned at £212, and the site given to Henry Earl of Surrey. The town was partially destroyed by fire in 1615, and was visited by the plague in 1631. The houses are irregularly built, and some of them of great antiquity, but the streets are well lighted with gas from the works on the Fairland. At the entrance to the town, on the Norwich road, stands the bridewell, or house of correction, appropriated solely to female convicts, who wash, sew, &c., for the prisoners confined in Norwich gaol, and near the centre of the town is the ancient market cross, carved with devices representing various articles of turnery, once the staple trade, but now nearly extinct; the manufacture of indiana, crape, barège, paramattas, and other silk and woollen mixed goods, is carried on to a considerable extent for houses in Norwich; there are also a brewery and numerous flour mills. The population of the parish in 1861 was 5,000, and of the town 3,000. In the parish are Kimberley Hall, the seat of the Earl of Kimberley, Burfield Hall, Stanfield Hall, Wattlefield Hall, and Cavick. Petty sessions are held on the third Tuesday in every month, and a new county court monthly at the "King's Head Inn." The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin and Thomas-à-Becket, includes the tower and western portion of the abbey church, and was repaired in 1845. It contains several Norman arches, an old font, and tombs of the founder, D'Albinis, Cliftons, Knevets, and Wyndhams of Felbrigg, who take their name from this place. It was from the steeple of this church that William Kett was hung in 1549, brother to "Kett the Tanner of Wymondham," the remains of whose house were not pulled down till 1844. The old chapel of St. Thomas-à-Becket is now unused and becoming dilapidated, but there is a modern chapel at Wattlefield, erected as a chapel-of-ease by J. Mitchell, Esq. The register commences in 1615. The Independents, Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, Baptists, Society of Friends, and Plymouth Brethren, have chapels. There is a free grammar school, founded by Edward VI., with an endowment of £200 per annum, and three scholarships at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. Peacham, who wrote the "Complete Gentleman," was master of this school; and Bentham, author of the "History of Ely," once vicar. Market day is Friday, but little business is now done. Fairs are held on 14th February and 17th May for cattle, and on Michaelmas day for pleasure.

WYMONDLEY, GREAT, a par. in the hund. of Broadwater, co. Herts, 2 miles S.E. of Hitchin, and 2 N.W. of the Stevenage station on the Great Northern railway. It is mentioned in Domesday survey as Wymundslai, and was held by the service of cupbearer at the coronation. The manor was given by the Conqueror to the Argentines, from whom it passed to the Allingtons, Grosvenors, and Cracherodes. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val., with Ippolitts consolidated, £320, in the patron. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The register commences in 1599. There are National schools. The charities produce about £10 per annum.

WYMONDLEY, LITTLE, a par. in the hund. of Broadwater, co. Herts, 2½ miles S.E. of Hitchin, and 1 mile S. of Great Wymondley. It is situated on the Hertford road, near the line of the Great Northern railway and the small river Hiz. Wymondley House was for some years the home of Coward College, founded in 1729 by W. Coward, Esq., for the education of Protestant Dissenting ministers, and of which Dr. Doddridge was the first tutor, but in 1838 the college, with its library, museum, &c., was removed to Torrington Square, London, and is now merged in New College, St. John's Wood. There are no remains of the priory of black canons founded by Richard Argentine in the reign of Henry III., the revenue of which at the Dissolution was returned at £37 10*s.* 6*d.*, but an ancient well and some avenues of stately box trees mark its site. The living, which was given to the Neodhams, is a don. cur., val. £20. The church is dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin. The Baptists have a chapel.

Yarburgh, Esq., is lord of the manor.

YARCOMBE, a par. in the hund. of Axminster, co. Devon, 8 miles N.W. of Axminster, and 5½ W. of Chard. The village is intersected by the road from London to Exeter, and has water communication by means of the Taunton and Chard canal. A moiety of the manor was given by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Francis Drake, in whose family the property still continues. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £490, in the patron. of the crown. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, has several painted windows and an old font. The register dates from the middle of the 16th century. The Baptists have a chapel. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £36 per annum. A pleasure fair used to be held on the second Tuesday after Trinity Sunday.

YARD, a hmlt. in the par. of Trefdraeth, hund. of Menai, co. Anglesea, 10 miles S.W. of Beaumaris, and 3 N.W. of Newborough.

YARD, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Decuman, co. Somerset, 3 miles from Watchett. The Devon and Somerset hounds meet at Yard Down.

YARDLEY, a par. in the hund. of Odsey, co. Herts, 4½ miles S.W. of Buntingford. It is watered by the river Beane. The land is chiefly arable, with a large portion of woodland, common, and waste. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Rochester, val. £250, in the patron. of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London, to whom the manor was given by King Athelstan. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, has some stained glass windows, and on the walls are some ancient fresco paintings. In the interior are monuments and the brass of a priest bearing date 1515. There is a National school. At Yardley Bury, the old seat of the Cornwalls and Chaunceys, Sir Henry Chauncey, the county historian, was born in 1700, and lies buried in the churchyard.

YARDLEY, a par. in the upper div. of Halfshire hund., co. Worcester, 4½ miles E. of Birmingham. It is situated on the Warwickshire border, from which county it is separated by the river Cole, over which are several bridges connecting this parish with that of Aston. It is traversed by the Warwick and Birmingham canal, and by the Great Western and London and North-Western railways, the former having a station at the western end of the parish at Acock's Green, and the latter near the eastern boundary at Stechford. The surface, which is level, is watered by several small streams falling into the Cole. About two-thirds of the land are meadow and pasture, and the remainder chiefly arable, with a little woodland and waste, the greater part of the common having been enclosed. The soil is a stiff loam on a substratum of clay. Great quantities of tiles are made here and conveyed to Birmingham. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Worcester, val. £600. The church, dedicated to St. Edburgh, was partially rebuilt in the reign of Henry VII. There are also a chapel-of-ease at Hall Green, built and endowed by J. Marston in the reign of Queen Anne, and a district church at Yardley Wood, dedicated to Christ, built and endowed by the late J. Taylor, Esq. The Independents have chapels at Rushall-lane and Acock's Green. There are two endowed grammar schools, and National and Sunday schools in connection with each of the churches, and on Moseley Wake Green is Springfield College for Independents, built in 1856 at a cost of £15,000, and having accommodation for 36 students. The charities, which now amount to about £1,000 per annum, besides 51 cottages used by the poor rent free, are administered by trustees, who every Easter Tuesday elect a bailiff. James A. Taylor, Esq., is lord of the manor.

YARDLEY-GOBION, a hmlt. in the par. of Potterspury, hund. of Cleley, co. Northampton, 3 miles N.W. of Stoney Stratford, and 6 S.E. of Towcester. It is situated on the line of the ancient Watling Street, near the Grand Junction canal and river Tove, and contains the Union poor-house for Potterspury. There is a paper mill. The Independents have a chapel.

YARDLEY HASTINGS, a par. in the hund. of Wymersley, co. Northampton, 8 miles S.E. of Northampton. It has remains of the old seat of the family of Hastings, Earls of Pembroke. The rectory was once held by Edward Lye, the Saxon scholar, who died here in 1769. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. with a portion of the rectory of Denton annexed, £356. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. The Independents have a chapel and school. There is also a National school. A fair is held on Whit-Monday. The Marquis of Northampton is lord of the manor.

YARINGTON. See YARNTON, co. Oxford.

YARKHILL, a par. in the hund. of Radlow, co. Hereford, 7 miles N.W. of Ledbury, and 7 N.E. of Hereford, on the river Frome. Part of the land is in hop gardens. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £130, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

YARLESIDE, a div. in the par. of Dalton-in-Furness, hund. of Lonsdale North of the Sands, co. Lancaster, 3 miles S.W. of Dalton. It comprises several small villages and hamlets on the coast opposite Walney Island.

YARLETT, an ext. par. lib. in the S. div. of Pirehill hund., co. Stafford, 4 miles N. of Stafford, near the river Trent, adjoining the par. of Weston-upon-Trent.

YARLEY, a tythg. in the par. of Wookey, co. Somerset, 4 miles S.W. of Wells. It contains the hmlt. of Henton.

YARLINGTON, a par. in the hund. of Bruton, co. Somerset, 3 miles S. of Castle Carey, 3 W. of Wincanton, and 4 S.E. of Bruton railway station. It contains the tythg. of Lower Woolston, and an eminence called Godshill, on the south-western declivity of which is a double-intrenched camp. Near the church are remains of a seat of the Berkeley family. The soil is a light sandy loam on a substratum of sandstone rock. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £350. The church is dedicated to St. Mary. The register commences in 1656. There is a Sunday-school. A fair is held on the 26th August for cattle, horses, and sheep. F. Rogers, Esq., of Westbury, is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

YARLINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of North Cadbury, hund. of Catsash, co. Somerset, 5 miles S.W. of Wincanton.

YARMOUTH, a par., seaport, and market town in the lib. of West Medina, Isle of Wight, co. Hants, 10 miles W. of Newport, 12 S.W. of Cowes, and 6 by steamer across the Solent to Lymington. This place, anciently called Eremuth, and now occasionally South Yarmouth, to distinguish it from Great Yarmouth in Norfolk, derives its name from its situation at the mouth of the river Yar, which falls into the Solent, and is here crossed by a bridge, just constructed, connecting the town with the neighbouring parish of Freshwater. It is a coast-guard station and sub-port to Cowes, being the first port within the Needles passage. In ancient times it appears to have been of much greater extent and importance than it is at present, as proved by the "town field," which, though now destitute of buildings, is laid out regularly at right angles, marking the lines of the ancient streets. Its decadence is attributed to the French, by whom it was, in the reign of Richard II., pillaged and entirely burned, and on two subsequent occasions it was nearly destroyed by them. It is a corporate town, having been incorporated by Baldwin de Rivers, or Redvers, Earl of Devon, and is nominally governed by a mayor and 12 capital burgesses. The borough first sent members to parliament in the 23rd of Edward I., but made no other return until the 27th of Elizabeth, from which period it exercised the privilege continuously till disfranchised by the Reform Act of 1832. The town consists of several streets, for the most part running E. and W., the houses are chiefly of brick. It contains a townhall and market-house, and a castle or fort at the western extremity of the town, built by Henry VIII. on the site of a former church, and in 1855 repaired and much strengthened by government. The George Hotel was originally built by Sir Robert Holmes, the admiral, for the reception of Charles II., and has in front of the house a small platform or balcony, which belonged to an old mansion, from which Charles I. addressed the people of the place when in the hands of the parliament and on his way from Carisbrooke to Hurst Castle. The population of the parish is 1861 was 699. The trade is now limited, consisting of the import of coal from Sunderland, timber from the New Forest, and of the export of iron ore to the smelting furnaces of Wales, which latter is dredged up off the coast, also fine white sand, used in the manufacture of flint-glass and the finer sorts of British china, obtained chiefly from pits on the shore of Alum Bay near the Needles. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £100. The church, dedicated to St. James, was built in 1543, and repaired in 1831, when the tower was raised 30 feet higher at the expense of T. Alexander, Esq. On the S. side is a sepulchral chapel containing a statue of life size, in parian marble, of Sir R. Holmes, formerly Governor of the Isle of Wight. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels. There are National schools opened in 1855, and at which the present (1868) average daily attendance is 160. The charities produce about £45 per annum, the bequest of Thomas Lord Holmes and others. Vestiges of a Roman station formerly existed on a spot now built upon. Friday is market day. A fair is held on 25th July.

YARMOUTH, or GREAT YARMOUTH, a par., market town, bonding port, and bathing-place, exercising separate jurisdiction, but locally situated in the hund. of East Flegg, co. Norfolk, 23 miles S.E. of Norwich by road, or 20 by rail, 120 N.E. of London by rail viâ Ipswich, and 145 viâ Cambridge, both routes being by the Great Eastern line, which has branch lines communicating with the London and North-Western, the Midland and Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railways. There are two railway stations, one over the railway bridge, the line from which runs to Norwich, and thence to London, viâ Cambridge; the other in South Town, the line from which passes through East Suffolk, and reaches London by Colchester. There is likewise water communication with North Walsham, Aylsham, Norwich, Beccles, and Bungay. The Roman station Garianonum was on the Yare, 3 miles from the present town. At the time of the Domesday survey, it was a royal demesne, and is described as a fishing town, containing 60 burgesses and a church. After the Norman conquest it rapidly increased in importance, and was fortified by the inhabitants in the reign of Henry III. with a wall which still exists perfect from end to end. It received a charter of incorporation from John, who granted to the burgesses the rights of the crown in consideration of a fee-farm rent of £50, which is still paid. In 1346 it supplied Edward III. with 43 ships, fully manned, for the siege of Calais, being more than any other place in England, and two years afterwards no fewer than 7,000 persons died of the plague, showing how populous it must then have become. In the 15th century, Caistor Castle, of which there are some ruins, was built by Sir John Fastolf, and about the same time frequent disputes arose with the Cinque Ports relative to the right of sending bailiffs to Yarmouth to assist in governing the place during the herring season, from Michaelmas to Martinmas. In Kett's or the "Norfolk Rebellion," in the reign of Edward VI., Yarmouth was attacked by the insurgents, who were, however, repulsed by the townsmen. In 1588 a beacon was placed on the castle to give warning of the approach of the Armada. During the civil war of Charles I. the town declared for the parliament. After the Restoration it was visited by Charles II. in 1671, and by William III., who landed here in 1692 on his return from the Continent. In the last French war it was selected as a naval station, where Admiral Duncan brought in his prizes after the victory of Camperdown in 1797, and was the port at which Nelson landed after the victory of the Nile. Next after Norwich, it is the chief town of the eastern counties, being the port for the supply of East Norfolk, Suffolk, and part of Essex. Its prosperity mainly depends on its foreign commerce, its inland trade, its fisheries, and its advantages as a bathing-place. It is a polling-place for East Norfolk, and until recently returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised for bribery by the Reform Act of 1867. Yarmouth takes its name from its situation at the river Yare's mouth, known to the Romans as the Gariensis, being built on the neck of land between Braydon Water and the German Ocean opposite Yarmouth Roads, where floating lights are placed to guide the mariner, on account of the dangerous character of the coast. The original town was built on the river side of the denes, but of late years it has extended so rapidly towards the shore, that it has now a sea-frontage of nearly a mile in length. The denes or sandbanks on which the town is built are peculiar, having been gradually formed within historic periods at the entrance of the estuary of the Yare, which once flowed up to Norwich. These accumulations of sand eventually became dry land, being assisted in the transformation by the light sand drifted from the beach by the prevailing E. winds, which sweep the coast in the spring. These denes now present the appearance of a narrow, level peninsula, washed on the E. by the German Ocean, and on the W. by the rivers Bure, Yare, and Braydon Water, which last is a tidal lake formed by the confluence of the Yare and Waveney before they again contract into the channel which carries their waters to the sea. The present town extends considerably beyond the limits of the old walls on the N. towards Caistor, on the E. towards the sea, and on the S. towards Nelson's Column. It is connected by a bridge over the Yare with the suburb or hamlet of South Town, sometimes called Little Yarmouth, on the right bank of the river, and within the Suffolk border, and further to the S. with the adjoining town of Gorleston. The principal streets are regularly built, and are crossed at right angles by 145 narrow lanes called rows. Many of the houses both in the old and new parts of the town are lofty, and there are terraces along the sea, chiefly let out in apartments to visitors during the season. The streets are well paved, lighted with gas, and drained under the Health of Towns Act, and the houses are supplied with water laid on by a company incorporated in 1853. Amongst the most striking features of Yarmouth are its quays, distinguished as South Quay and North Quay; the former is near a mile and a quarter in length, and 450 feet broad in some parts, having a promenade planted with trees in the centre. A Marine drive has recently been constructed along the entire sea-frontage, with the Wellington pier to the S., and the Britannia pier to the N. On the South Denes is a column by Wilkins, erected in 1817 by county subscription to the memory of Nelson. This column is 144 feet high, with fluted shaft, surmounted by a ball and a figure of Britannia, holding in her hand a trident and a laurel-branch; the summit is reached by a circular staircase of 270 steps, terminating in a chamber supported by caryatides, and commanding an extensive land and sea view. Other conspicuous objects are the suspension-bridge over the Yare, constructed in 1855; the wrought-iron bridge over the Bure, and the iron tubular bridge. On the beach are the South Star and North Star batteries; and on the South Quay is an Elizabethan mansion, built in 1596, once occupied by a granddaughter of Oliver Cromwell. At some little distance is the Star Inn, with pendant ceilings and carved wainscoatings, once belonging to the Bradshaw family. The principal public buildings are the Town House; the Town Hall, built in 1716, and adjoining which is a Record Room, in which the town muniments are kept; the Tolhouse Hall; the borough gaol and house of correction; the custom-house, situated on the Quay; the bath-house, built in 1759, has been converted into an hotel, but continues to supply hot and cold sea-water baths; the corn exchange is a modern structure, situated in Regent-street; the theatre was erected in 1778, but remodelled in 1820; the public library on the Quay contains reading-rooms and 10,000 volumes. Other buildings are the Royal Hospital, founded in 1838; the Fishermen's Hospital, built in 1702; the workhouse, built in 1838, at a cost of £7,000; the Naval Lunatic Asylum, situated at the southern extremity of the town, and built originally for barracks by Pilkington in 1811, at a cost of £100,000; an armoury, built by Wyatt in 1806; the depôt for the East Norfolk Militia and Militia Artillery, built in 1850; assembly-rooms; post-office, inland revenue-office, 5 branch banks, a savings-bank, gas-works, herring-curing houses, a silk factory, corn-mills, breweries, malt-houses, timber and ship-building yards, small docks, three large rope manufactories, and a cement manufactory on the river. The market place covers above 3 acres. The number of vessels belonging to the port is upwards of 500, besides about 250 fishing-boats and other small craft. The population of the parish in 1861 was 30,338, and of the borough, which includes South Town and Gorleston in Suffolk, 34,810. The borough, which was first incorporated by John in 1208, is divided under the Municipal Reform Act into six wards, and is governed by a mayor, 12 aldermen, and 36 town-councillors, assisted by a recorder, high-steward, town-clerk, coroner, clerk of the peace, and other officers. The style is that of "Mayor, aldermen, burgesses, and commonalty of Great Yarmouth." The corporation revenue amounts to about £8,000 per annum; the old town charities being under the care of trustees. The recorder presides in the borough court, and a county court is held monthly at the Tolhouse Hall. Under a separate commission of peace, quarter sessions are held, and petty sessions daily by the mayor and magistrates. There are commissioners for the care of the haven and pier, and also for pilotage. The races take place on the South Denes towards the end of August, which the inhabitants also use for cricket and other amusements. Two regattas are annually held, one in the Roadstead and the other on Braydon Water. The Poor-law Union and superintendent registry comprise the parish, but the new county court district includes besides the registry of Flegg and Gorleston sub-district. The East Norfolk Militia and Norfolk Militia Artillery have their head-quarters here. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £400, in the patron. of the dean and chapter. The parish church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, was originally commenced in 1101; it is the largest parish church in the kingdom. Formerly 16 chapels or oratories were attached to it, and it contains a fine organ by Jordan, built in 1733. Extensive restorations were made in 1848, and are still in progress. It contains an old font of Purbeck marble, a copy of Rubens's "Elevation of the Cross," monuments to the England, Fuller, Hall, and other families. The register commences in 1558. There are besides several district churches and chapels-of-ease; that of St. George was built in 1716, under the authority of an Act of Parliament; that of St. Peter, in 1835, at a cost of £12,000, by Scoles; that of St. John, in 1857, chiefly for the accommodation of seamen. These are all in the parish; but at Gorleston is the parish church of St. Andrew, containing a brass of Sir John Bacon; and at South Town is the church of St. Mary, built in 1831. The Roman Catholics have a chapel in the Regent-road, the Jews a synagogue, recently rebuilt, and the Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, General and Particular Baptists, Independents, Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, Society of Friends, and Unitarians have chapels. Adjoining the churchyard is a cemetery of 12 acres; there is also a Roman Catholic cemetery. The old grammar school, founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, has been re-established by the charity trustees; the Children's Hospital school, rebuilt in 1845; British, National, infant, and Unitarian schools, and a factory evening-school for girls. The charities are considerable. The Victoria Gardens, a former place of amusement, are now (1868) being built over. Market days are Wednesday and Saturday; fairs are held on the Friday and Saturday in Easter week, and on Monday and Tuesday at Shrovetide.

YARMOUTH, LITTLE, a hmlt. See SOUTH TOWN, co. Suffolk.

YARNFIELD, a hmlt. in the par. of Maiden-Bradley, hund. of Norton-Ferris, co. Somerset, 5 miles N.E. of Bruton, and 6 S. of Frome.

YARNFIELD, a tnshp. in the par. of Swinnerton, co. Stafford, 2 miles S.W. of Stone.

YARNSCOMBE, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of Hartland, co. Devon, 6 miles N.E. of Great Torrington, 8 S. of Barnstaple, and 3½ from Umberleigh station, on the North Devon railway. The soil is clayey, but fertile. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £135. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, was repaired in 1852. There is a National school. The charities produce about £25 per annum. The trustees of the late Lord Rolle are lords of the manor.

YARNTON, a par. in the hund. of Wootton, co. Oxford, 4 miles N.W. of Oxford, and 3½ S.E. of Woodstock. It is a station on the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton section of the Great Western railway It is situated near the Oxford canal and the river Thame. It is mentioned in Domesday survey as Hardintone, and was subsequently given to Eynsham Abbey by the name of Erdington, from which it passed to Bernard de St. Walenco and Edmund Earl of Cornwall, who gave it to Rewley Abbey, and since the Dissolution has been held by the Spencer and Dashwood families. The old manor house is now a farmhouse. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £220, held by the Principal of Exeter College, Oxford. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, has several monuments to the Spencer family, and in the churchyard is a carved cross. There is a free school, founded by the late Alderman Fletcher, of Oxford.

YARPOLE, a par. in the hund. of Wolphy, co. Hereford, 5 miles N.W. of Leominster, and 18 from Hereford. The par. comprises the tnshps. of Bircher and Yarpole. The principal residences are Highwood House, Bircher Hall, The Knoll, and Bycroft. The living is a vic. annexed to the rect. of Croft. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, has recently been improved by the addition of a new chancel. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There is a National school for this and the adjoining parishes. The charities produce about £8 per annum. W. T. Kevill Davies, Esq., of Croft Castle, is lord of the manor.

YARROW, a par. in co. Selkirk, Scotland. This parish was formerly of larger extent than at present, comprehending the three ancient parishes of Duchoire, St. Mary's, and Kirkhope; but, in 1852, the last-named was reconstituted into a distinct parish. It is still an extensive par., situated on the borders of Peebles-shire and Roxburghshire, and contains the post-office station of Yarrow, the hmlt. of Yarrowfens, the vil. of Ettrick Bridge, and part of the vil. of Yarrowford. The surface is broken, comprising a succession of valleys and hills, the principal vales being those of the Yarrow, Ettrick, and Tees, portions of which are included within this parish, and are separated by hill-chains running nearly parallel to each other in a W.S.W. direction; besides which there is, towards the S., a tract of lofty tableland, about 8 miles long and 2 wide, in which the Alewater and several tributaries of the Borthwick have their sources. A few plantations have been recently made, covering about 350 acres, but the country is open sheepwalks and moorland. The prevailing rocks are greywacke and clay-slate, and the soil a light sandy earth, interspersed with boulders. The principal landowners are the Duke of Buccleuch and the Earl of Traquair. In the upland district of the S. are lakes Shaws-loch, Akermoor, Hellmoor, and Clearburn. There are sulphur springs at Craig and Catslacknowe—the latter known as St. Peter's Well. In the neighbourhood of Traquair, overlooking the Tweed, are two Border towers or fastnesses, one called Elibank, still in good preservation, and the other Blackhouse Tower, a stronghold, in the reign of Malcolm Canmore, of the Black Douglasses, and supposed to have been the scene of the Douglas tragedy from the existence of seven monumental stones on the adjoining heights. The par. is in the presb. of Selkirk, and synod of Merse and Teviotdale. The minister's stipend is £270, in the gift of the crown. The parish church was built in 1840, and repaired about 1825. There are also a Free church, and parochial schools at Yarrow and Ettrick Bridge, and two non-parochial schools. The churches of the ancient parishes of Duchoire, or Dewchar, and St. Mary's, have long since been demolished: the latter stood on the margin of St. Mary's Lake, and is mentioned in ancient writings as St. Mary's Kirk of the Lowes, and the Church of the Virgin Mary in Ettrick Forest.

YARROW, THE, a river of co. Selkirk, Scotland, rises at Yarrow Cleugh, under Hart Fell, and after a course of 21 miles in a north-easterly direction through a wild country, in which it traverses St. Mary's Loch and gives name to the Vale of the Yarrow, it joins the river Ettrick near Selkirk.

YARROWFORD, a vil. in the pars. of Yarrow and Selkirk, co. Selkirk, Scotland, 5 miles N.W. of Selkirk, on the river Yarrow.

YARUM, or YARM, a par. and market town in the W. div. of Langbaurgh lib., North Riding co. York, 43 miles N.W. of York, 16 N.E. of Northallerton, and 4 S.W. of Stockton. It has stations on the Stockton and Darlington, and on the North-Eastern railways. This town, formerly spelled Yareham, is situated on a peninsula formed by the river Tees, which is navigable for vessels of 60 tons, and is here crossed by a stone bridge of five arches, built in 1400, connecting Yarum with the county of Durham. It consists principally of one long spacious street, and contains some good houses, extending N. and S., with a covered market-cross standing in the centre. It was flooded in the years 1753 and 1771, when the water in the river rose 20 feet higher than usual. In addition to the advantages derived from the navigation of the Tees, this place enjoys with Stockton a salmon fishery, the tide flowing some distance above the town. The population in 1861 was 1,401. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the coasting trade and in a paper-mill. The town was first lighted with gas in 1856. Running nearly parallel with the whole length of the town on its western side is the viaduct of the North-Eastern railway, 780 yards in length, and crossing the valley of the Tees upon 43 arches formed of red bricks with stone dressings, the two central arches being 83 feet span and 71 feet in height. In 1803 an attempt was made to span the river by a cast-iron bridge of 180 feet span, but owing to some defect in the abutments the whole fabric gave way on the 12th January, 1806, when just completed, and has not been since resumed. The Friarage, now the property of Edward Meynell, Esq., to whom the manor belongs, occupies the site of a Black Friary, founded in the early part of the 13th century by Peter de Brus, who also founded St. Nicholas's hospital. The steward of the manor holds a court-leet annually, and the magistrates meet fortnightly in a chamber over the market-cross, where the old curfew bell is kept. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of York, val. £210, in the patron. of the archbishop. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The Roman Catholics, Wesleyans, and Primitive and Association Methodists have chapels. There are a free grammar school, founded by Thomas Conyers in the reign of Elizabeth, and National, infant, and Sunday schools. The charities produce about £40 per annum, including the school endowment. The market, which was on Thursday, has become extinct. Fairs are held on the first Thursday in April, Ascension Day, the 2nd August, 18th to 20th October for horses, cattle, and sheep, the last being the great fair of the year.

YARWELL, a par. in the hund. of Willybrook, co. Northampton, 1 mile S.W. of Wansford, and 6 miles N.E. of Oundle. It is situated near the river Nen, and contains Sulehay, Walk, and Lodge. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Peterborough, annexed to the vic. of Nassington. The church is dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene. The charities produce about £35 per annum. The Earl of Westmoreland is lord of the manor.

YATE, a par. and tnshp. in the upper div. of Henbury hund., co. Gloucester, 1 mile W. of Chipping-Sodbury, and 10 miles N.E. of Bristol. It is a station on the Birmingham, Gloucester, and Bristol section of the Midland railway. The village is situated on the river Frome, and has been made a polling-place for the western division of the county. The workhouse for the Poor-law Union of Chipping-Sodbury is situated here. The soil is mostly a red-coloured earth upon a substratum of clay and coal, of which there are some mines in operation. The Beaufort hounds meet here. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £851. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an antique font and an old brass in memory of A. Stapleton and wives, bearing date 1590. The charities produce about £38 per annum. There are National and British schools. The Rev. H. J. Randolph is lord of the manor.

YATE, GREAT, a tnshp. in the par. of Croxden, S. div. of Totmonslow hund., co. Stafford, 5½ miles N.W. of Uttoxeter, and 3 S.E. of Cheadle.

YATEHOUSE, a hmlt. in the par. of Middlewich, hund. of Northwich, co. Chester, 2 miles N.E. of Middlewich. It is in conjunction with Byley to form a tnshp.

YATELEY, a par. and vil. in the hund. of Crondall, co. Hants, 4½ miles N.W. of Farnborough, 6 N.E. of Winchfield station on the London and South-Western, and 3 from the Blackwater station on the Reading and Reigate railways. The par. is situated on the road from London to Southampton, near the river Blackwater, and comprises the tythgs. of Yateley Cove and Hawley, which last was constituted a district parish in 1839. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Winchester, and in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church is dedicated to St. Peter, and at Hawley is another church, recently erected for the district of Hawley and Cove. The Baptists have a chapel. There is a National school, partially endowed by Mary Barker in 1706. The charities produce about £75 per annum.

YATESBURY, a par. in the hund. of Calne, co. Wilts, 4½ miles N.E. of Calne. The village is situated on the river Kennet. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £510. The church, dedicated to All Saints, was restored and the chancel rebuilt in 1855. In the interior is an ancient Norman font, and some stained glass. There is a church school, built by the rector in 1856. The charities produce only £1 per annum. J. Tanner, Esq., and J. Tuckey, Esq., are lords of the manor.

YATE-WITH-PICK-UP-BANK, a tnshp. in the par. of Whalley, higher div. of Blackburn hund., co. Lancaster, 4 miles S.E. of Blackburn, and 4 W. of Haslingden. The neighbourhood abounds in coal and stone, and there are a cotton-mill and a large reservoir. The inhabitants attend the church of St. James at Over Darwen. There are National and Sunday schools.

YATTENDON, a par. in the hund. of Faircross, co. Berks, 12 miles N.W. of Reading, and 7 N.E. of Newbury. The village had formerly a market on Tuesdays, granted to Peter de "Etyndon" in 1258. A castle, said to have been inhabited by King Alfred, once occupied the site of the present manor-house, and a spot called England's Field is pointed out as the scene of a victory gained by that monarch over the Danes. The rectory was once held by Thomas Carte, the historian, who wrote part of his History of England while residing here, and, dying in 1754, was buried in the church. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £413. The church is dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul. A fair is held on 13th October. Thomas Howard, Esq., of Yattendon House, is lord of the manor.

YATTON, a par. in the hund. of Winterstoke, co. Somerset, 12 miles S.W. of Bristol, 7 N. of Axbridge, and 4 S.E. of Clevedon. It is a station on the Bristol and Exeter section of the Great Western railway. The par. includes the ecclesiastical district of Cleeve, and the hmlts. of Claverham, Hewish, and Kenn. It is watered by the river Yeo, and forms part of a plain extending nearly to the banks of the Severn. The surface is level, except in the district of Cleeve, in which the hills rise into rocky heights, partly clothed with wood and intersected by deep ravines or combs. Cleeve Toot, which rises to the height of 200 feet, is capped by a mass of rock, and near it is Cadbury Hill camp, an ancient fortification. Limestone abounds, and is quarried for building and for burning into lime. There are two villages, those of Yatton and Cleeve, the latter being about 2 miles distant on the road from Bristol to Weston-super-Mare. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £435, in the patron. of the bishop. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains an antique font, an old register chest, and monuments to the Wyck and Newton families, one of which is of white sculptured alabaster, bearing effigies of Sir R. Caradoc Newton, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in the reign of Henry VI., and his wife. There is besides a district church at Cleeve, erected in 1840 and dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The Wesleyans and Society of Friends have chapels, the latter at Claverham. There are National and infant schools. The charities produce about £60 per annum, including £10 to Lane's school. Robert Castle, Esq., of Cleeve is lord of the manor.

YATTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Aymestry, co. Hereford, 5 miles N.E. of Ross, 7½ N.W. of Leominster, and 2 from Wigmore. It is situated on Watling Street turnpike road, and on the river Lug.

YATTON, a tnshp. and chplry. in the par. of Much Marcle, co. Hereford, 5 miles S.W. of Ledbury, and 7 from Ross, near the river Wye.

YATTON KEYNELL, a par. in the hund. of Chippenham, co. Wilts, 4½ miles N.W. of Chippenham, and 12 N.E. of Bath. There are quarries of freestone for building and paving. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Gloucester and Bristol, val. £520. The church is dedicated to St. Margaret. The Baptists have a chapel. There is a free school, supported by the Rev. H. K. Boldero.

YAVERLAND, a par. in the lib. of East Medina, Isle of Wight, co. Hants, 8 miles S.E. of Newport, 5 S. of Ryde, and 1 mile from Brading. The village is situated on Sandown Bay, near Brading Harbour. The ancient manor-house, formerly the seat of the Russell, Hatfield, and Richards families, is now a farmhouse. Fossils have been found in the cliffs. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Winchester, val. £230. Sir G. E. Hammond is lord of the manor and sole landowner.

YAWTHORPE, a hmlt. in the par. of Corringham, co. Lincoln, 5 miles N.E. of Gainsborough, on the river Eau.

YAXHAM, a par. in the hund. of Mitford, co. Norfolk, 2 miles S.E. of East Dereham. It is a station on the Great Eastern railway. The village is situated on a branch of the river Yare. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £500. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a National school, enlarged in 1850. The charities produce £25 per annum, besides 20 acres of fuel allotment.

YAXLEY, a par. in the hund. of Hartismere, co. Suffolk, 1½ mile W. of Eye, 4 miles S. of Diss, and 1¼ mile E. of Mellis railway station. The village is situated on the Roman way to Caistor. The principal residence is Yaxley Hall. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £150, with 36 acres of glebe. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains a carved oak pulpit, stalls, painted window, several monuments, and a brass of A. Felgate, date 1596. The register commences in 1620. The charities produce about £45 per annum. Sir E. C. Kerrison, Bart., M.P., is lord of the manor, and with Lord Henniker, principal landowner.

YAXLEY, a par. in the hund. of Norman-Cross, co. Hunts, 4 miles S. of Peterborough, 15 from Huntingdon, and 1½ mile N.E. of Stilton. It is situated on the Great North Road, near the line of the ancient Ermine Street and Whittlesea Mere, one of the most extensive sheets of water in the kingdom, but now drained. In Domesday survey it is mentioned as Takesley, and had formerly a market. The town occupies the eastern slope of a ridge of hills, and in 1861 had a population of 1,411. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Ely, val. £177. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is, from its situation on an eminence at the western extremity of the village, conspicuous for many miles round. The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Independents have chapels. There are endowed and National schools. The charities produce about £80 per annum. Abbot Yakesley of Thorney and Dr. O. Gregory were natives. A fair is held on Holy Thursday.

YAZOR, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of Grimsworth, co. Hereford, 4 miles S. of Weobly, and 8 from Hereford. The village is situated on the road from Hereford to Kington and Aberystwith. The surface is undulating and well wooded. There are quarries of limestone and freestone in the hills. The soil is loamy, and the subsoil clay. The principal residence is Foxley, late the seat of Sir R. Price, Bart., who was lord of the manor. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Hereford, val. £188. The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, was rebuilt in 1855. It has five stained windows, and carved oak pulpit and reading desk. There is a National school.

YCHYLDREF, a tnshp. in the par. of Corwen, co. Merioneth, 2 miles from Corwen.

YEADON, a tnshp., town, and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Guiseley, upper div. of Skyrack wap., West Riding co. York, 6 miles N.E. of Leeds, 8 N.W. of Bradford, and 3 S. of Otley. At Apperley Bridge, about 2 miles distant from the town of Yeadon, but within the tnshp., is a station on the Midland, and at Horsforth, about 3 miles distant, is a station on the North-Eastern railway. The town is situated on the N. side of Airedale, in the midst of a thriving manufacturing district. Its population in 1861 was 4,109, but that of the tnshp. and ecclesiastical district of St. John, which are co-extensive, contained 4,259 inhabitants. The tnshp. is divided into Upper and Lower Yeadon, and contains the hmlts. of Henshaw and Apperley Lane. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the woollen manufacture, which is extensively carried on both by firms and private individuals, and there are several bleach works. The streets and houses are lighted with gas from works established in 1844. The surface, which is watered by copious springs, is chiefly high moorland, affording good pasture. The soil is various, but rich in parts, upon a subsoil of gravel and rock. Lane Head House and Low Hall are the principal residences. The living is a perpet. cur.* in the dioc. of Ripon, val. £163, in the patron. of the Rector of Guiseley. The church, dedicated to St. John, was erected in 1842. The Wesleyans, Reformed Wesleyans, and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are National and Sunday schools, the latter held at the church.

YEALAND CONYERS and YEALAND REDMAYNE, tnshps. in the par. of Warton, hund. of Lonsdale South of the Sands, co. Lancaster, 1 mile N. of Warton, 2½ miles S.W. of Burton-in-Kendal, and 8 N.E. of Lancaster. They are situated on the Kendal canal and Carlisle railway. The village is surrounded by numerous seats and villas. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Manchester, val. £60, in the patron. of the Hyndman Trustees. The church is dedicated to St. John. There are also a Roman Catholic chapel, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and a meeting-house belonging to the Society of Friends, who have a school here.

YEALMPTON, a par. and town in the hund. of Plympton, co. Devon, 5 miles W. of Modbury, 6 S.E. of Plymouth, and 3½ S.E. of Earl's Plympton. In the Saxon times this place is said to have belonged to Ethelwold, who had a palace here, and came through the Fitzherberts, Hantings, and other Norman families to the Pollexfens. It was anciently denominated a borough. The navigable river Yealm rises at Yealm Head in Dartmoor Forest, and flowing to the S.W. falls into the English Channel between Plymouth Sound and Bigbury Bay, and is here crossed by a bridge. Kitley, or Kitley House, the seat of the Bastard family, contains a collection of the most valuable productions of Sir Joshua Reynolds. The soil is light but fertile, and the subsoil limestone, which is extensively quarried for burning into lime; there are also quarries of marble in great variety. The impropriate tithes belong to the Prebendary of King's Teignton in the cathedral of Salisbury. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val., with the perpet. cur. of Revelstoke annexed, £360, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was restored in 1850 at a cost of £1,500, defrayed by E. R. Polloxfen Bastard, Esq. The interior contains columns and arches of polished marble of various colours, and has a screen separating the chancel and nave of carved marble, also stalls, a brass of Sir J. Crokker, bearing date 1508, and a pillar stone 8½ high, with "Toreus" on it. There is besides a chapel-of-ease at Revelstoke, and the Roman Catholics and Wesleyans have chapels. There are a public reading room and National schools for boys and girls. The charities produce about £5 per annum. A cattle market is held on the third Wednesday in every month.

YEARDSLEY, a hmlt. in the par. of Taxall, hund. of Macclesfield, co. Chester, 10 miles S.E. of Stockport. It is situated on the W. bank of the river Goyt, on the road from Manchester to Buxton, and is joined with Whaley to form a township.

YEARNOR, a tythg. in the par. of Porlock, co. Somerset, 5 miles W. of Minehead.

YEARSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Coxwold, wap. of Birdforth, North Riding co. York, 5 miles N.E. of Easingwold.

YEATON, a tnshp. in the par. of Baschurch, co. Salop, 5 miles N.W. of Shrewsbury, on the river Perry.

YEAU, a hmlt. in the par. of Nettlecombe, co. Somerset, 4 miles S. of Watchett.

YEAVELEY, a tnshp. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Shirley, hund. of Appletree, co. Derby, 4 miles S. of Ashborne, and 10 from Derby. The ruins now called Stydd Chapel formed part of a hermitage given by Ralph le Fun, in the reign of Richard I., to the Knights of St. John, and which afterwards came to the Knights Hospitallers, who had a preceptory here, which at the Dissolution was valued at £107 3*s.* 8*d.* The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Lichfield, and in the patron. of the Vicar of Shirley. The church is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The Independents have a chapel. There is a National school. The feast takes place on the first Sunday after 16th August.

YEAVERING, a tnshp. in the par. of Kirk-Newton, co. Northumberland, 5 miles N.W. of Wooler. It is situated on the river Glen, and contains Yeavering Bell, one of the Cheviot hills, rising more than 2,000 feet from the vale. Its summit, which is level and 1,000 yards in circuit, is encompassed by the remains of an ancient wall, eight yards in breadth, built on the verge of the hill, surrounding an inner wall defended by a ditch, and having in the centre a large cairn hollowed like a bowl. On other parts of the hill are several smaller circles, vestiges of a grove of oaks, and in the neighbourhood a cairn and a cluster of rocks, respectively called Tom Tallan's grave and crags, but supposed to be all of Druidical origin. It is frequently mentioned in the Saxon chronicles as Adgefrin, where Edwin of Northumbria, after his conversion to Christianity, had a palace, and where, in 626, Paulinus baptized his converts in the river Glen. Near the village is a column of stone, commemorating the victory gained in 1415 by the Earl of Westmoreland, with 440 men, over the Scottish army of 4,000, under Sir R. Umfraville.

YEDDINGHAM, a par. in the wap. of Buckrose, East Riding co. York, 8 miles N.E. of New Malton, at the bridge over the navigable river Derwent, and on the road from York to Scarborough. There was anciently a Benedictine priory, founded in the 12th century by Roger de Clerc, and valued at the Dissolution at £26. The living is a vic. in the dioc. of York, val. £205. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist.

YEILSHIELDS, a hmlt. in the par. of Carlake, co. Lanark, Scotland.

YELDEN, a par. in the hund. of Stodden, co. Beds, 5 miles E. of Higham-Ferrers, and 12 N. of Bedford. It is situated in a valley, and is mentioned in Domesday survey as Ewelden. The women and children are employed in lace making. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £300. The church, dedicated to St. Mary, contains some old stone stalls and two brasses from 1433. The Wesleyans have a chapel. The charities produce about £4 per annum. There is a National school. In the parish is the moated site of an old baronial castle. J. Sambrook Crawley, Esq., is lord of the manor.

YELDERSLEY, a tnshp. in the par. of Ashborne, hund. of Appletree, co. Derby, 3 miles S.E. of Ashborne.

YELDHAM, GREAT and LITTLE, pars. in the hund. of Hinckford, co. Essex, 8 miles N.W. of Halstead, 8 S.W. of Clare, and 1 mile from the Yeldham station of the Colne Valley railway. These two adjoining villages, called also Lower and Upper Yeldham, are situated in the valley of the river Colne, on the road from Colchester to Cambridge, and appear to have been in existence in the time of Edward the Confessor. Nearly in the centre of Great Yeldham stands an oak 30 feet high, and 29 feet in girth at 4 feet from the ground. The principal seats are Spaynes Hall and Spencer Grange—the former the residence of John Way, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The soil is strong and rather wet, but the lands are generally well cultivated, and in the gravelly strata many fossils are found. Hops are largely cultivated in the neighbourhood, and there is much timber. Both livings are rects.* in the dioc. of Rochester—that of Great Yeldham, val. £510, and that of Little Yeldham, £225. The church of Great Yeldham is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are mixed National schools, and Ford's endowed school, with an income of £40, also six almshouses, besides several small charities for the poor.

YELFORD, a par. in the hund. of Bampton, co. Oxford, 3½ miles S.W. of Witney. It is situated on a branch of the river Thames, and sometimes called Yelford-Hastings, from having once belonged to the family of Hastings, but was afterwards purchased by Mr. Speaker Lenthall, in whose family the manor still continues. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Oxford, val. £110. The church is dedicated to St. Swithin.

YELLING, a par. in the hund. of Yoseland, co. Hunts, 4 miles S. of Caxton, 6 N.E. of St. Neot's, and 8 S. of Huntingdon. In the reign of Charles I. it was the property of Sir Julius Cæsar. The rectory was once held by Venn. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Ely, val. £400, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to the Holy Cross. The Baptists have a chapel. There are National and Sunday schools. The charities consist of a poors' allotment of 14 acres of land.

YELL, MIDDLE AND SOUTH, an united par. in the island of Yell, Shetland Isles, coast of Scotland. It comprises the post-office stations of East Yell and Burra-voe, the isles of Hascussay, Samphrey, and the middle and southern portions of the island of Yell. The parish extends 13¼ miles N. and S. in length, with an extreme breadth of 7 miles, including a large extent of water, which is intimately mingled with the land. The chief portion of the land is in pasture and unenclosed moorland. On the W. side of the island of Yell the shores are rocky, but on the E. low and sandy. Traces of copper ore have been found in the serpentine rocks. Most of the inhabitants unite the occupations of farmers and fishermen, and within the last quarter of a century sheep-farming has been successfully introduced. The living of the united pars. of Middle and South Yell is in the presb. of Burra-voe.

YELL, NORTH, a par. in the Shetland Isles, coast of Scotland. It comprises the northern portion of the island of Yell, with the island of Feltar, besides numerous small islets in Colgrave and Yell sounds. It is a mountainous district, chiefly sheep-walks, with remains of Picts' houses and Danish forts along the coasts. The cliffs on the W., with the islets adjoining, are frequented by swarms of sea-fowl, terns, eider-ducks, and other Arctic species, while the narrow seas or sounds, called Blumel, Colgrave, and Yell sounds, abound in herrings, sillocks, and ca'ing whales. The par. is in the presb. of Burra-voe. The minister's stipend is £160, with manse.

YELLOWFURZE, a hmlt. in the bar. of Lower Duleek, co. Meath, 3 miles S.W. of Slane.

YELSTEAD, a hmlt. in the par. of Stockbury, co. Kent, 7 miles N.E. of Maidstone.

YELVERTOFT, a par. in the hund. of Guilsborough, co. Northampton, 9 miles N.E. of Daventry, 8 E. of Rugby, and 4½ S.W. of Welford. The village is situated on the Warwickshire border, near the Grand Junction canal, and is watered by a brook which falls into the Avon. The land is chiefly in pasture, and the soil a mixture of clay and rich loam. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Peterborough, val. £500. The church is dedicated to All Saints. The Independents have a chapel, and there is a school endowed by Mrs. Ashby in 1719, with land now producing £40 per annum, also poors' land let for £15 per annum, which is distributed to the poor at Christmas.

YELVERTON, a par. in the hund. of Henstead, co. Norfolk, 5½ miles S.E. of Norwich. The village is situated on the road from Norwich to Beccles, and gives name to the Avonmore family. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Norwich, consolidated with Alpington. The church is dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin. The register commenced in 1559. There is a National school. The charities produce about £57 per annum, apportioned between the rector and the poor. The Earl of Rosebery is lord of the manor.

YEO. There are two rivers of this name; one rises at Seven Sisters' Springs, near Milborne Port, co. Dorset, and joins the Parret at Langport; and the other rises near Parkham, co. Devon, and joins the Torridge below Littleham.

YEOVIL, a par., market town, and municipal borough in the hund. of Stone, co. Somerset, 21 miles S.E. of Bridgwater, 40 S.W. of Bristol, and 48 N.E. of Exeter. It has a joint station of the London and South-Western and Bristol and Exeter railways, and a station of the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth railway, also a branch line to Durston. It is supposed to be the Roman station Velox, from the number of coins and tesselated pavements which have been found, and was called Gevele by the Saxons, and in Domesday survey is mentioned as Givele, and Ivle, which names may be identified with that of the river Yeo or Ivel, on the left bank of which it is situated, and which here separates the counties of Somerset and Dorset. The par. consists of the borough of Yeovil, the chplry. of Hendford, and the tythgs. of Huntley, Lyde Marsh, and Wigden, and the manor of Newton. The present town, which stands on the direct road from London to Exeter, consists of a number of streets and lanes irregularly laid out, but the Improvement Commissioners have recently improved the appearance of the town by the removal of the unsightly buildings in the market-place and the shambles. The streets are paved and lighted with gas, and some are spacious, containing many good houses built of stone, and most of the shops have been modernised. The drainage has been recently improved, but the inhabitants still suffer from the absence of a good supply of water. The principal public buildings are the townhall and market-house, a Grecian structure of stone, erected in 1849; the lower part consisting of a basement of six pillars, in which the corn exchange and markets are held, and above the façade of the townhall, a chamber 58½ feet in length, by 35 in breadth, and 22 high; the police-station, situated in Wine-street, is a substantial building, with a residence for a superintendent of police, and cells for the prisoners; the Union workhouse is situated in the Preston-road, and has accommodation for 300 inmates. The savings-bank, in Princes-street, was erected in 1839; there are, besides, two branch commercial banks, a penny bank, literary institute and reading-rooms, with library, three breweries, and an old market cross. The population of the parish in 1861 was 8,486, and of the borough 7,957, inhabiting 1,420 houses. The woollen trade, for which Yeovil was once famous, has entirely disappeared, as also the linen manufacture, which succeeded it, but is now one of the principal centres of the kid glove manufacture, which gives employment to the greater portion of the inhabitants of the town, as well as furnishing employment to thousands of females in the surrounding district. In the immediate vicinity of the town are Newton House, of the Harbin family, who have been settled here from the reign of James I.; Hendford House, Penn House, Yew Tree Close; Hendford Manor-house, Kingston Manor, and Hollands'. The manor was anciently held under the crown by its rectors, by the abbots of Sion, by Queen Katherine in the reign of Henry VIII., and subsequently by the Philipses of Montacute, with whom it remained until recently purchased by G. Harbin, Esq., for the corporation. In 1853 an Act of Incorporation was obtained, under which the borough is governed by a mayor, 4 aldermen, and 12 common councilmen. Both the borough and county magistrates hold petty sessions in the townhall weekly, and a county court is held monthly. The board of guardians meet weekly, on Tuesday, at the Union house; the union embracing 35 parishes and townships. It is within the Exeter bankruptcy district, and is the head of a Superintendent Registry. The police arrangements are under the county constabulary, who have a chief station here for the whole of the magisterial district. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val., with the par. of Preston annexed, £560. The parish church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is of the 14th century, 146 feet long by 50 wide, and the length of the transept is 80 feet. It has recently undergone restoration, during which the galleries have been removed, and several stained-glass windows have been inserted. In the interior of the church, which had formerly four chantries, are several brasses, one of a priest, bearing date 1519, an old lectern, an antique font, an altar piece in form of a Grecian pediment, a sedilia, several monuments of the Harbin, Batten, and Newman families, and a monumental marble bust of the late vicar, Rev. R. Philips. There is, besides, a district church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, built in 1846, the living of which is a perpet. cur., val. £150. The Independents, Wesleyans, Baptists, Calvinistic and Primitive Methodists, Unitarians, Society of Friends, and United Brethren, have chapels. There is a free grammar school, with an endowment of £150 per annum, and National, Sunday, denominational, and adult evening schools. The charities produce about £500 per annum. Market day is Friday, for cattle, corn, cheese, flax, and provisions. Fairs are held on 28th and 29th June, and 17th, 18th, and 19th November, for horses, cattle, &c.

YEOVILTON, a par. in the hund. of Somerton, co. Somerset, 1½ mile E. of Ilchester, 4 miles N. of Sparkford railway station, and 7 from Yeovil. The par. is bounded on the N. by the river Yeo, and contains the hmlts. of Bridghampton, Hainbury, and Speckington. In the Saxon times it was called Giveltone, and is mentioned in Domesday survey as held at the Conquest by William de Ow, or Ewe, from whom, in the reign of Henry VI., it came to William de Botreaux, and is now the property of G. D. W. Digby, Esq., who is lord of the manor. The land is nearly evenly divided between arable and pasture, with some orchard. The soil is clayey upon a subsoil of clay. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of Bath and Wells, val. £426, with 60 acres of glebe, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Bartholomew. The register commences in 1653. There are parochial and Sunday schools.

YERBESTON, a par. in the hund. of Narberth, co. Pembroke, 5 miles S.W. of Narberth. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of St. David's. The church is dedicated to St. Lawrence.

YERBY, a hmlt. in the par. of Kirk Leatham, lib. of East Langbaurgh, North Riding co. York, 5 miles N. of Guisborough, near the river Tees' mouth.

YEROTH. See LLANFIHANGEL-AR-ARTH, co. Carmarthen.

YESTER, a par. in co. Haddington, Scotland. It comprises the post-office vil. of Gifford, and the hmlts. of Long-Yester and Long-Newton. It extends in length about 6½ miles from N. to S., with an extreme breadth of 5 miles, and is bounded on the S. by Berwickshire, and elsewhere by the pars. of Humbie, Bolton, Haddington and Garvald. Its surface is hilly, abounding in sheep-walks. A portion of the land is under excellent cultivation. The strata belong to the carboniferous formation, with the exception of the hills, which are greywacke. The soil is principally of a clayey nature upon a subsoil of clay. There were formerly quarries of red sandstone and limestone, but both have been abandoned. The par. is traversed by the road from Haddington to Lauder, and by that from Tranent to Dunn. The vil. of Long Yester is about 2 miles S.E. of Gifford, and 5 S.S.E. of Haddington. It is situated at the foot of Lammermoor Hills. The par. is in the presb. of Haddington and synod of Lothian and Tweeddale. The stipend of the minister is about £254. The parish church, situated at Gifford, was erected in 1708, and was restored in 1830. There is a Free church at Yester, and three parochial schools, situated respectively at Gifford, Long-Yester, and Long-Newton. The Rev. Mr. Innis, the late aged minister, survived four Marquises of Tweeddale, and buried all the heritors of his day, all his elders, and all his congregation. The principal seat is Yester House, the residence of the Marquis of Tweeddale. Within its grounds is the tower built by Hugh Gifford prior to 1267, and including Bobhall, the goblin hall mentioned in "Marmion." This parish, which is indifferently called Yester, or Gifford, was called Bothons before the 16th century.

YESTER'S LADY, a par. in the burgh and co. of Edinburgh, Scotland. See EDINBURGH.

YETHOLM, a par. in the district of Kelso, co. Roxburgh, Scotland. It comprises the vils. of Kirk-Yetholm and Town-Yetholm. It extends in length about 4¾ miles from N.W. to S.E., with an extreme breadth of 2 miles. It is a Border parish, bounded on the N.E. and E. by England, and elsewhere by the pars. of Morebattle and Linton. The surface is hilly, abounding in sheep-walks, the highest point being 800 feet above sea-level. The higher hills are covered with verdure to their summits, and the lower are chiefly arable. The predominant rocks are New Red sandstone in the lower parts, and porphyry, quartz, and compact felspar in the hills. Bowmont Water divides the parish nearly into equal parts, and on its banks are considerable haughs. There are traces of a Roman camp on Yetholm Law, and of two British camps on Camp Hill and Castlelaw. The par. is traversed by a road down the valley of the Bowmont, and by another road towards Kelso, and is within 6 miles of the English North-Eastern railway. It comprises two villages, or rather a village in two parts, situated on either side of the Bowmont—that on the W. side, called Town-Yetholm, which is about 8 miles S. of Kelso, and the other designated Kirk-Yetholm, about a quarter of a mile on the other side of the stream—and is chiefly inhabited by gypsies. At this spot Scott saw Jean Gordon, the original of his "Meg Merrilies." This par. is in the presb. of Kelso, and synod of Merse and Teviotdale. The stipend of the minister is about £260. The parish church, which is thatched, was partly erected in 1709. There are a Free church and an United Presbyterian church, also a parochial and other schools, and a library. The principal seat is Cherrytrees.

YETLINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Whittingham, N. div. of Coquetdale ward, co. Northumberland, 5 miles N.W. of Rothbury, and 12 S.W. of Alnwick. It is in conjunction with Callaley to form a township.

YETMINSTER, a hund. in the Sherborne div. of co. Dorset, contains the pars. of Batcombe, Clifton Maybank, Melbury-Bubb, Melbury-Osmond, and Yetminster, comprising 9,960 acres.

YETMINSTER, a par. in the hund. of its name, co. Dorset, 5½ miles S.W. of Sherborne. It is a station on the Yeovil and Weymouth branch of the Great Western railway. The par., which lies on the western border of the county, and gives name to the hundred, comprises the chplries. of Chitnole and Leigh, with the hmlts. of Winterhays, Holbrook, and Totnell. The village, situated near the river Ivel, a branch of the Yeo, consists of one long street, having still the appearance of a town. In 1300 the Bishop of Sarum obtained a grant from Edward I. for a market and fair, which was confirmed by Richard II.; but the market has long been discontinued. There are quarries of hard freestone in the parish. The impropriate tithes belong to the prebendary of Yetminster, in the cathedral of Salisbury. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. with the curs. of Chitnole and Leigh annexed, £160, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Andrew. There are besides chapels-of-ease at Chitnole and Leigh—the former dedicated to St. Peter. The Hon. R. Boyle, in 1699, bequeathed an estate now producing about £90, with house and orchard, for teaching 26 boys. There are also National schools at Yetminster and Chitnole. Fairs were held on the 23rd April and 1st October. G. D. W. Digby, Esq., is lord of the manor.

YETTINGTON, a hmlt. in the par. of Bicton, co. Devon, 4 miles S.W. of Sidmouth.

YIELDING. See YELDON, co. Beds.

YNISLOUGHOR, a hmlt. in the par. of Llandilotalybont, co. Glamorgan, 3 miles N.E. of Loughor.

YNIS-PYR. See CALDY ISLAND, co. Pembroke.

YNISYMOND, a hmlt. in the par. of Cadoxton, co. Glamorgan. It is situated in the Vale of Neath, and has recently much increased in population owing to the collieries.

YNYSAWDRE, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Bride Major, co. Glamorgan, 3 miles S. of Bridgend. It is situated at the confluence of the rivers Ewenny and Ogmore.

YNYS-CYNHAIARN, a par. in the hund. of Evionydd, co. Carnarvon. The par. includes the market town of Tremadoc, and the bathing-place of Portmadoc, which latter is a subport to Carnarvon. The surface is hilly, and there are mines of copper and slate. The population of the parish in 1861 was 3,138. The living is a perpet. cur.* annexed to that of Criccieth. The church is dedicated to St. Cyuhaiarn.

YOCKENTHWAITE, a hmlt. in the par. of Arncliffe, West Riding co. York, 12 miles N.E. of Settle, in the vale of the river Wharfe.

YOCKLETON, a tnshp. in the par. of Westbury, hund. of Ford, co. Salop, 8 miles S.W. of Shrewsbury. It is situated on a feeder of the river Severn, and has a station on the Shrewsbury and Welshpool branch railway.

YOKEFLEET, a tnshp. in the par. of Howden, East Riding co. York, 4 miles N.E. of Saddlethorpe, on the bank of the river Ouse. The Rev. J. Empson is lord of the manor.

YOKER, a vil. in the par. of Old Kilpatrick, co. Dumbarton, Scotland, 1 mile N. of Renfrew, on the river Clyde, and on the road from Dumbarton to Glasgow.

YORK, a market town, municipal and parliamentary borough, a city and county of itself, having exclusive jurisdiction, and the seat of an archdiocese, locally in the Ainsty, on the borders of the East and West Ridings of co. York, 198 miles N.W. of London by road, or 191 by the Great Northern, and 220 by the North Midland railways. It is one of the most famous as well as one of the most ancient towns of England. It is situate in a flat spot on the Ouse, where the Foss joins it; was Ebraue or Eborac of the British Brigantes, on Watling Street, Eboracum of the Romans, who made it an imperial colony, and the capital of Maxima Cæsariensis. It was given up by the Romans 426-7. By the Anglo-Saxons it was called Eoferwic, from the Eure or Yore, another name for the Ouse. Athelstan is said to have established a mint here in 937. It underwent many changes from Saxons and Danes till the time of William the Conqueror, who built a castle here. At the making of Domesday (1080-6) it had 654 houses, of which 145 were French or Norman. It was burnt in 1137 with the cathedral and 40 churches. Being so near the borders of Scotland, it had its share in the turbulent scenes enacted in the border wars; in the wars of the Roses it and its neighbourhood was the scene of many bloody conflicts, and though it chiefly sided with the White Rose party, as might have been expected from the heads of that party deriving their title from it, yet it was frequently occupied by the opposite side, and its lofty gates exhibited the barbarous spectacle of the heads of the Lancasterian and Yorkist chiefs alternately as either party were victorious. It has been visited from time to time by almost all our kings. It rebelled against Henry VII. in 1488; but was soon subdued by the Earl of Surrey, and the leaders of the insurrection executed. In Henry VIII.'s reign, among many insurrections in the north caused by the dissolution of the monasteries, the most formidable, styled by the principal leaders of it "The Pilgrimage of Grace," made themselves masters of the city, and compelled the archbishop to take the oath and join their party. When this and other disturbances of the same nature had ceased, the king visited York and remained twelve days. He had, in 1537, established at York a permanent council for the government of the northern counties; the president of which, with the title of Lord President of the North, had his palace at the King's Manor, built of the materials of the suppressed abbey of St. Mary's. The celebrated Earl of Stafford inhabited it for some time; and his arms, quartered with those of the royal family, may still be seen over the main entrance. At his impeachment by the House of Commons it was made an article in the indictment that he had presumed to place his private shield on a royal mansion. A mint was again set up in York by Lord Chancellor Goodrick, Bishop of Ely, in 1551, 5th of Edward VI. York held with Charles I. in the parliamentary wars, till, after a siege of three months by General Fairfax, and being relieved for a short time by Prince Rupert, it was taken July, 1644, when Cromwell visited it. In 1746, after the retreat of the Pretender into Scotland, many who had taken a part in that rebellion were tried, and eleven persons, mostly gentlemen, were executed at York, and its gates were again defiled by human heads. From the unfortunate Richard II. this city received its principal immunities and privileges. He is recorded to have taken his sword from his side, and given it to be borne before William de Selby, as first Lord Mayor of York; this being the only city besides the three metropolis cities of London, Edinburgh, and Dublin that enjoys the privilege of its chief magistrate being styled "My Lord." The corporation of the city, as stated by the Municipal Corporation Commissioners in their report in 1835, claims to be a corporation by prescription. The earliest charter extant is one of Henry II., which confirms all the liberties, laws, customs, guilds, merchants, &c., in England and Normandy as they were held in the time of Henry I. Richard II. constituted the city of York a county of itself, and authorised it to elect two sheriffs, who, with the lord mayor, should have cognizance of all pleas and actions within the city limits. In the time of Henry VI., the Ainsty, a wapentake of the county, situated on the W. of the city, was annexed to the city, but was, by Act of Parliament in 1837, during the reign of William IV., re-annexed to the West Riding of the county. A common council was established by letters patent in the time of Henry VIII. as a part of the corporation; and a charter of Charles I. introduced the election of 18 members of this council for each of the four wards of the city. Charles II., in the last year of his reign, offended at the citizens for not having paid proper attention to his brother James, Duke of York (afterwards James II.), on his second visit to them, took the government of the city out of the hands of the lord mayor, and deprived the city of its charter, which, however, James on his accession renewed. When the corporation was dissolved by the passing of the Municipal Reform Act in 1835, it consisted of the lord mayor, 12 aldermen, 2 sheriffs, 32 persons who had served the office of sheriff, and were commonly called "the twenty-four," 72 common councilmen, a recorder, 2 city council, a town-clerk, 2 coroners, and a number of inferior officers. By the Municipal Corporation Act in 1835, the city was divided into six wards. Previously it had been divided into four, viz., Micklegate, Walmgate, Bootham, and Monkwards; it has now in addition to these Castlegate and Guildhall wards. Each ward elects six councillors, two of whom go out yearly in turn, but are capable of re-election. The councillors elect 12 aldermen, who serve for six years. Under the old corporation, the lord mayor, aldermen, sheriffs, and twenty-four met in a chamber separate from the councilmen; hence the two were called the Upper and the Lower House. Under the new Act the entire body meet in the same place. The style and title of the corporation is "The lord mayor and commonalty of the city of York," who are charged with the management and protection of the city. There was formerly a board of commissioners appointed to superintend the lighting, paving, and cleaning of the streets; but the recent Health of Towns Act abolished the board, and the duties now devolve upon the corporation, who are constituted by the same Act the local board of health with greatly extended powers. The lord mayor resides during his term of office at the Mansion House. This building was erected in 1725. It is chiefly celebrated for its state-room, which occupies the entire length of the front. The interior is ornamented with the royal arms and the arms of the city over the fireplace at each end. It also contains a collection of paintings, full-length portraits of William III., George II., George IV., Marquis of Rockingham, Duke of Richmond, Lord Dundas, &c. The Guildhall stands behind the Mansion House, and is approached through a gateway which forms part of the front of that building; it was erected by the mayor and commonalty in concert with the master and brethren of the guild of St. Christopher in 1446. At the Reformation this society was dissolved, and its property, including the Guildhall, granted to the mayor and commonalty of the city. It is a Gothic room; the roof is supported by large pillars of oak; over the entrance is a painting of St. Paul pleading before King Agrippa, by Richard Marsden, presented to the corporation in 1852 by the Rev. Thomas H. Lane Fox, of Bramham Park. The hall contains also a massive silver bell, captured from the great Pagoda at Rangoon at the storming of that city in April, 1852, presented to the city by the 51st regiment, or Yorkshire West Riding regiment. It was placed in the hall in July, 1855. The court of sessions for the city is held here before the city recorder. At the further extremity is the petty sessions room, where the magistrates hear minor cases; also council-room, record-room, county court and other offices. The principal courts, however, are in the castle. Some people have supposed that the site of the present castle and Clifford's Tower, at the junction of the rivers Fosse and Ouse, was anciently occupied as a British fortress before it was held by the Romans. William the Conqueror rebuilt the castle and erected the Clifford's Tower, now a ruins, but one of the greatest ornaments of the city. It derived its name from one of the Cliffords being its first governor, and stands on a lofty mound of earth in the castle yard. The castle was rebuilt by Richard III. It continued in the possession of the crown for many years, and was used as the official residence of the high sheriffs of Yorkshire, and the depository of the revenues and munitions of the crown. After it ceased to be used as a military post, it was converted into a county prison. The original county courts were erected in 1673, the old building now forming the debtors' prison in 1708, and the present courts in 1777. They consisted of a county hall 150 feet by 45, with circular civil and criminal courts having domes 40 feet high and Ionic portico of 4 columns. In 1821 it was resolved to remodel the whole prison; the area of the castle was greatly enlarged, the additional space being defended by a lofty stone wall, including Clifford's Tower, which previously stood without the walls: and four double prisons were erected with airing courts radiating from the governor's house in the centre, from which the whole may be inspected. These alterations cost £203,530, and were finished in 1836. The county courts are on the S.W. side of the area; the building on the opposite side contains the female wards. The old building with clock, formerly the felons' ward, is now assigned to the debtors. The original castle and tower were strongly defended by a deep moat, and approached by drawbridges, which have long been removed. York was the seat of a bishop in very ancient times. Eborius is mentioned as its bishop at the Council of Arles in France, A.D. 314. Gregory the Great made York, as well as Canterbury, an archiepiscopal see. For more than a hundred years a bitter contention existed between the archbishops of the two sees regarding precedency; it was first openly begun in the reign of the Conqueror between Lanfranc of Canterbury and Thomas of York; it was at length settled by the pope in the reign of Henry II., A.D. 1176, who "to end old divisions," says Fuller in his Church History, "made a new distinction, making the Archbishop of York primate of England, and the Archbishop of Canterbury primate of ALL England." The Archbishop of York's province includes the dioceses of York, Carlisle, Chester, Durham, Sodor and Man, and the lately erected sees of Manchester and Ripon; Worcester, Lichfield, and Lincoln anciently belonged to it. It contains the counties of Cheshire, Lancashire, York, Westmoreland, Cumberland, Durham, Northumberland, and the Isle of Man (Notts having been transferred to Canterbury). The archbishop is Lord High Almoner, and has the privilege of placing the crown on the Queen Consort's head at coronations. His income is £10,000, with the patronage of about 130 livings. The chapter comprises a dean, income £1,250 (in the year 1379 the deanery was valued at £400), precentor, chancellor, subdean, succentor, 3 archdeacons, 4 canons, and 24 prebendaries (now only honorary), and 5 minor canons. The archbishop's palace is at Bishopthorpe, a village 3 miles S.E. from the city. It is an object of interest to visitors, who are allowed access on certain public days by application to the housekeeper. Anciently the archbishop had a palace on the N. side of the cathedral. Archbishop Boyer is said to have rebuilt it towards the end of the 12th century, and a small portion of his work is still remaining, as is the chapel of the palace of a later date. This building, having long been an unsightly ruin, was repaired in the time of Dean Markham, and is now used as the library of the dean and chapter. This library was originally commenced by the widow of Archbishop Matthews (she died in 1629 at the age of 78), who presented it with all her husband's books. It possesses also some valuable old MSS., some of Caxton's books, Erasmus's Greek Testament on vellum, &c., &c. It is open to the public under certain restrictions. Near this library is the new deanery; the old residence of the dean, which was on the S. side of the minster, having been taken down. A house for the residence of the canons residentiary was a few years back erected on the N. side of the minster, on the site of part of the ancient archiepiscopal palace. York Poor-law Union contains, besides the city parishes, 16 parishes in York Ainsty, 13 parishes of the East Riding, 19 parishes in the North Riding. The superintendent registry contains the same, with the exception of 5 parishes, namely, Benningbrough, Lillings Ambo, Flaxton, Kexby, and Stamford Bridge. The new county-court district corresponds with the registrar's. The greatest ornament of York is its minster or cathedral. It dates from Saxon times. Edwin, the fifth Saxon King of Northumbria, and a native, it is said, of York, had married Ethelburga, the daughter of Ethelbert, King of Kent, and having through her influence and the zeal of Paulinus, a companion of St. Augustine, become a conveft to Christianity, was, with Coiffi, the heathen priest, and a considerable number of the nobles of his kingdom, baptized by Paulinus on Easter Day, A.D. 627, at York, in the church of St. Peter, "which," says Bede, "he had hastily constructed of wood while he was a catechumen, and being prepared to receive baptism." Soon afterwards, by the advice of Paulinus, to whom he had given York as his episcopal see (and who, receiving the pallium from Rome, was subsequently elevated to the rank of archbishop), Edwin made preparations for building a larger and a nobler church, in which the oratory that he had previously constructed, and in which he had been baptized, might be enclosed. He laid the foundation and began to raise the edifice, but before the walls were completed he was slain. The work was finished by his successor, Oswald, but when he had also fallen, and Paulinus had been compelled to retire with Ethelburga into Kent, the church was wholly neglected and fell into ruins. From this state the bishop, St. Wilfrid, restored it about the end of the 7th century. About fifty years after this, in the year 741, this edifice was greatly injured by fire. In the episcopate of Albert, who was elected to the see of York in the year 767, a new church was begun, finished, and dedicated. This edifice is said to have been one of the most magnificent of the Anglo-Saxon churches. A small but interesting portion of this church, comprising a part of the earlier church built by Edwin, was brought to light during the excavation of the present choir after the calamitous fire in February, 1829.

This building, however, together with its library, collected and given to it by Archbishop Egbert, was destroyed in the great conflagration of the city in the beginning of the reign of William the Conqueror. Archbishop Thomas, who was appointed to the see by William in the year 1070, finding the church thus despoiled, "rebuilt it (according to the testimony of his friend Hugo the precentor) from the foundation, and adorned and enriched it with books and clergy." This building also suffered from fire, being in great part destroyed in the year 1137, after which it was rebuilt, it is generally supposed, by Archbishop Roger, but some say that the work of Roger was confined to repairs, alterations, and additions. The next account we have is the building of the present S. transept by Archbishop Walter Grey, which was commenced about the year 1220, and finished 1241. The rebuilding of the N. transept, it is thought, was begun by the same prelate, but not completed till several years after his death, namely, in 1260, by John le Romaine, treasurer of the cathedral. There are no documents in existence relating to the building of the chapter house, but it is conjectured with some probability that this structure was erected between the years 1280 and 1340. The present nave was begun in the year 1291, in the episcopate of John le Romaine, son of the treasurer of the same name, but not finished till the year 1360, in the episcopate of Thoresby, by whom the present choir was begun, but not completed before the year 1472. About that time the central or lantern tower was finished; and shortly afterwards the upper storyof the north-western tower, the south-western tower having been finished probably about thirty years earlier. This Archbishop Thoresby appears to have been one of the most munificent contributors to the erection of York Minster; he found many liberal co-workers; the central tower was erected by John Skirraw, a prebendary of York; the towers at the W. end by John de Birmingham. This cathedral is cruciform, measuring in length from base to base of buttresses E. and W. about 519 feet, and from base to base of the transept 249 feet. It consists of a nave with side aisles (these are unequalled for grandeur in this kingdom, being as lofty as those at Westminster, but not so narrow), two transepts with side aisles, a choir with side aisles, a lady chapel, a large central tower, two bell towers, and a chapter house with its vestibule. This chapter house is of octagonal form, the angular diameter being 60 feet 6 inches, and the height of the central boss from the floor 62 feet. The roof is unsupported by any pillar. It has been lately decorated by Willement. In it are preserved several curious articles of ancient times, such as the carved ivory horn of Ulphus of Deira, a silver crosier brought from Portugal by Charles II.'s queen, &c. &c. The internal height of the nave is 93 feet, of the choir 101 feet, of the central tower (internally) 182 feet. The height of the western towers is about 201 feet to the top of the pinnacles, 178 feet to the top of the battlement. During the Commonwealth period the interior of the cathedral suffered much injury, and several of the ancient monuments were demolished or mutilated, but the greatest injuries were inflicted during the present century, when it has twice been nearly destroyed by fire. The first time was on February 2nd, 1829. It was the work of a maniac, Jonathan Martin (the brother of the famous painter of the "Deluge," "Belshazzar's Feast," &c.). He had concealed himself in the Minster the preceding day, Sunday, after divine service. He was soon apprehended and tried, but acquitted on the ground of insanity. He was sent to a lunatic asylum, where he died, October, 1838. By this fire the whole of the roof of the choir, 222 feet long, was destroyed, with the woodwork on each side; and the walls above the arches of the choir were so much damaged, that it was found necessary to rebuild them; the organ was burnt, and the altar screen so much injured as to render a new one necessary; the communion plate also was melted. No time was lost in repairing these injuries; but the restorations were scarcely completed when another fire occurred, hardly less destructive in its results. A workman who had been employed to repair the clock, with most culpable negligence, left his candle burning when he quitted his work. This was on the evening of May 20th, 1840; and by nine o'clock the south-western tower, in which he had been working, was discovered to be in flames. By twelve o'clock this tower, with its peal of bells, was destroyed, and the whole of the roof of the nave had fallen in. The progress of the flames was on both occasions checked by the great central tower. The parts destroyed have since been entirely reconstructed by Sir Robert Smirke, at a cost of above £100,000, raised by subscription. In the place of the old peal of 10 bells, a new peal of 12 bells, of large size and fine tone, was presented to the Minster by the late Dr. Beckwith, in 1844. A new great bell was also cast for the Cathedral by Mr. Mears, of London (at whose foundry the peal was cast), in 1845, and paid for by subscription. It is hung in the N.W. tower, and is the largest bell in the kingdom, weighing 11½ tons, and exceeding by 4 tons Great Tom of Oxford; it is 12½ feet in diameter and 7½ high. The new organ, built by Messrs. Elliott and Hill, was presented by the Hon. and Rev. Lumley Savile, afterwards Earl of Scarborough, at a cost of £8,000; it has 53 stops and 4,200 pipes. The communion plate was presented by the archbishop, in addition to his subscription of £2,000. Government made a grant of timber to the value of £500.—At the period of the suppression of monasteries by Henry VIII., York contained 41 parish churches, 17 chapels, 16 hospitals, and 10 religious houses; of the churches there remain 23. All Saints Church, in North-street, has a spire 120 feet high. In the S. wall, which is built in part of Roman bricks, is a piece of Roman sculpture. All Saints, Pavement, an ancient church, belonged to Durham Priory, previous to the Conquest. The steeple was in ancient times furnished with a lantern, as a guide to travellers through the forest of Galtres, N. of the city. Holy Trinity, Goodram Gate, is an ancient building, in which are some old monuments and specimens of painted glass. Many of the stones in its walls are marked with fire, supposed to have been occasioned by the fire which, in the reign of Stephen, destroyed the Cathedral and 39 churches, with a large portion of the city. St. Crux, Pavement, belonged at one time to St. Mary's Abbey. It was rebuilt in the early part of the 15th century; the tower about the close of the 17th century. The Earl of Northumberland, who was beheaded in 1572, was buried in this church. St. Dennis, Walmgate, was an ancient rectory, the property of the hospital of St. Leonard. It has an Anglo-Norman porch, in good preservation. During the siege of York by the Parliamentarians, in 1644, the spire of this church was injured by a cannon ball; and being afterwards further damaged by lightning, it was taken down about 60 years ago, and the present spire erected. St. Helen's, Stonegate, occupies, according to tradition, the site of a temple of the goddess Diana, and Roman foundations have been discovered about 7 feet below the surface of the ground. This church was closed by Act of Parliament during the reign of Edward VI., in consequence of its awkward situation at the junction of three streets, but re-opened in the following reign. St. Lawrence, without Walmgate Bar, is small, without aisles. Its particularities are, a Roman porch, an ancient and curious font, and St. Lawrence on the gridiron, sculptured on the base of the spire. St. Margaret, Walmgate, is an ancient structure, with a porch concealed from general view by the houses built in front of it. The porch consists of 4 recessed circular arches, with curiously-sculptured representations, and supported on light round pillars. On the top of the porch is a small stone crucifix, a carving supposed to belong to the 11th or 12th century, and to have been brought from the hospital of St. Nicholas, without the city. St. Mary, Bishophill the younger, has the largest square tower of any parish church in the city. St. Mary, Castlegate, has a spire 155 feet high, which has been twice injured by lightning. St. Michael's, Spurriergate, an ancient building, had been much improved by the removal of houses on the S. side. The rectory of this parish was given by William the Conqueror to the Abbey of St. Mary. St. Michael-le-Belfry, Petergate, is the most spacious and the most elegant of the York parochial churches. The present edifice dates from 1545, the previously existing church having been built about the time of the Conquest. St. Olave, Marygate, is, with the exception of the Minster, the oldest ecclesiastical foundation in York. A monastery was founded here by Seward, Earl of Northumbria, who was buried in it in 1005. The buildings were so much injured during the siege in 1644, that in 1732 they were taken down, and the present church built out of the ruins of the abbey. St. Sampson, Church-street, is old, with a steeple, on the W. side of which may be traced the figure of St. Sampson, or Sanxo, who is said to have been Bishop of York in the time of the Britons. The steeple was injured in the parliamentary siege. St. Saviour, St. Saviour-gate, has been recently restored. Among the monuments in this edifice are those of Sir John Harley and his lady, whose bequest for the promotion of religious instruction has been so much under discussion in the chancery courts. The living was given by William the Conqueror to Whitby Abbey. St. Martin, Coney-street, was a parish church at the time of the Domesday survey. The square tower at the S.W. angle contains a peal of 8 bells, presented by W. Thompson, Esq., in 1729. The interior, and several parts of the exterior, were repaired about 1855, and it is now one of the most beautiful churches in the city. St. Martin cum Gregory, Micklegate, is an ancient building, but the steeple was rebuilt in 1677. The windows contain some painted glass. In 1585 the church of St. Gregory was united with St. Martin, hence its present name. The new churches are St. Paul's, Holgate-road, completed 1852; St. Thomas, Lowther-street, erected in 1854. The other principal buildings in York are the Centenary chapel of the Wesleyan Methodists, erected in 1839; the Unitarian chapel, erected in 1692, principally by Lady Henley; Salem chapel, belonging to the Independents, erected in 1838, at a cost of £5,000, and capable of accommodating 1,700 persons. The Royal school of St. Peter's, Bootham, bought within the present century for the cathedral school founded by Queen Mary in 1557; the Blue-coat charity, on Neaseholme-green; the Diocesan training school, for the supply of schoolmasters for the parochial schools. There are several other grammar schools, founded by charitable individuals in olden times. A school for the blind, which occupies the Manor House before-mentioned as the palace of the Lord-President of the North, was established in 1836, in memory of the late W. Wilberforce, by subscription and donation, which in 1837 amounted to £8,439. The York lunatic asylum, Bootham, was first established in 1772; in 1813 one of the wards of the asylum was burnt down, and four patients, who had been chained to the walls, perished in the flames. The Retreat, a lunatic asylum of the Society of Friends, was built in 1796. It will now accommodate 140 patients. It is situate about one mile E. of the city. Half a mile E. of the city, on the Fulford-road, is the cemetery, 8 acres in extent, formed in 1836, by a company. The County Hospital, in Northgate, was founded in 1740, but the present building was erected in 1850. There are gasworks, waterworks, and cavalry barracks; also a race-course, about a mile from the city, southward, where a grand stand was erected in 1754 by the corporation. The races are held twice a year—April and August. There is a theatre in St. Leonard's-place; and assembly rooms, for concerts and balls, designed by the Earl of Burlington, in Blake-street, near the site of the ancient church of St. Wilfrid. The largest room is 112 feet in length, by 40 wide, and as many high. St. Mary's Abbey, in ruins, occupies the site of a monastery founded by Siward, Earl of Northumbria, and dedicated to St. Olave, the Danish king and martyr. In the time of William Rufus its name was changed to St. Mary. In 1137 the monastery was consumed by fire, but rebuilt in 1270 by Simon de Warwick, the abbot, whose building remained till the Dissolution, in 1540. The site and remains of the abbey were in the possession of the crown until purchased by the Philosophical Society in 1826. The first stone of the museum of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society was laid October 24th, 1827, and the building opened February 22nd, 1830. In the museum gardens stands the Roman multangular tower, which formed an angle of the wall of the ancient Eboracum. The late Dr. Beckwith, who died in 1843, by his will directed the sum of £10,000 to be paid to the Society, for the better promotion of its objects. Here are attached to the gardens the swimming-baths, the property of the Society; the large bath is 120 feet by 80. The city walls, as rebuilt by Edward I. about 1280, and restored and paved with brick in 1831, make a promenade, and are 2 miles 3 furlongs round, with six gates—Micklegate Bar, where Richard Duke of York's head was placed; Bootham Bar; Monte Bar, very old, with figures on the battlements, restored 1846; Walmgate Bar, with its old portcullis battlements and barbican, restored 1648 and 1840; Fishergate (postern gone), which, having been walled up, was reopened 1827; and Skeldergate. About 20 towers appear to be left out of the 40 which Leland saw. It gives the title of duke to a prince of the blood royal, the first one being Edward III.'s son Edmund de Langley, 1385. The first newspaper was established in 1790. There is a three-arched bridge over the Ouse, built 1810-20, for £80,000, 40 feet broad, the mid arch 75 feet span, the two others 65 feet. (The old bridge, built about 1235, broken up by floods in 1654, and restored, was at a great slant, on five pointed arches, with the mid arch 81 feet span, 26 feet high.) York has returned two members to parliament ever since the 49th year of Henry III., and by the Reform Act of 1832 the bounds were enlarged so as to take in, besides the old city, the suburbs of Clifton Haworth and part of Talford; the population in 1851 being 40,359, and in 1861 of 45,385, while the municipal borough contained only 40,433. York is also the place of election, and a polling place for the North Riding. From the time of the Conquest to the middle of the last century, the trade and commerce of York were very considerable. There were numerous guilds or corporations of traders, who were empowered by charters from the crown to pursue their respective callings. The Ouse would admit the passage up to the bridge of the largest class of vessels at that time employed in the merchant service; but the increase in size of trading vessels, and the distance from the sea, with other causes, led to the gradual decline of the trade of the city. York is not now the seat of any extensive manufacture. It has, however, been long celebrated for the making of shoes and leathern gloves, for combs, and other articles of horn. The confectionery, also, of York, is much celebrated. An extensive business is carried on by several druggists. The wholesale tea and coffee business is an important branch of the trade of York. Within the last sixty years the roasting of coffee was under the exclusive control of the Board of Excise, and London, Bristol, Liverpool, and York, were selected as the only places in England for the establishment of public roasting offices. The merchants of York took advantage of this privilege; the tea and coffee trade was extensively cultivated, distant connections were formed, and, though the excise restrictions no longer exist, the trade that was widely formed during their continuance has become a distinct and important part of the traffic carried on in York. The general market is held on Saturday, besides which there are smaller markets on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The corn market is on Saturday. There is a fortnightly cattle-mart or fair held on Thursday, in the cattle-market commenced in 1826, but which was in 1856 much enlarged and improved by the corporation. There is a weekly wool-market held on Thursday, during the summer months. Live-stock fairs are held on the Saturday before Old Candlemas-day, Old Lady-day, Whit-

Monday, Old St. Peter's-day, Old Lammas-day, Old Michaelmas-day, Old Martinmas-day, and Old Christmas-day; the leather fairs are the first Wednesday in March, June, September, and December; the fairs for cattle, &c., are on Whit-Monday, 10th July, 12th August, and 23rd November; the yearly horse-show in the last whole week before Christmas.

YORKSHIRE, a maritime co. in the N. of England, and the largest shire in the United Kingdom, being nearly equal in extent to Wales. It lies on the shores of the North Sea, between the Friths of the Humber and the Tees, extending between 53° 18′ and 54° 40′ N. lat., and between 0° 9′ E. and 2° 36′ W. long. It is bounded on the N. by Durham and the river Tees, on the N.W. by Westmoreland, on the W. by the moorlands of Lancashire, on the S.W. by Cheshire, on the S. by the Frith of the Humber, and the counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, and Derby, and on the E. and N.E. by the shores of the North Sea. Its form is irregular, the greatest length being across the county in a straight line, from the projecting point called Spurn Head, in the S.E., to the border of Westmoreland on the N.W., a distance of about 124 miles, and its greatest breadth 105 miles; but its average length is about 90 miles, and breadth 65 miles. The whole circuit of the county is about 400 miles, of which 120 are coast-line—the northern portion being rocky, and the southern low and sandy. From the mouth of the Tees to Scarborough the cliffs, which are always washed by the sea at high-water, rise from 70 to 150 feet, and often overhang the beach; further on they rise still higher, and at Stoupe Brow, about 7 miles S. of Whitby, attain an elevation of 895 feet above the sea. The coast-line then gradually declines towards the promontory of Flamborough Head, which forms the extremity of a range of chalk cliffs. From this point to Hull the shore is generally flat, and subject to the encroachments of the sea, which has partially submerged the villages of Auburn, Hartburn, and Hyde. At Spurn Head, the Ocellum Promontorium of Ptolemy, the Humber formerly made considerable encroachments, but since the reign of Charles I. it has gradually receded, leaving extensive tracts of marshland, which have recently been embanked and converted into pasture. The early history of Yorkshire is little known. Who were the aborigines, or whether the Iberian immigration reached hither, there is no evidence. On the coming of the Romans, two Celtic tribes, named the Parisii and Brigantes, were found there, and about A.D. 71, in the time of the Emperor Vespasian, Petilius Cerealis overthrew the Brigantes, and thenceforth this county was included in the province Maxima Cæsariensis, and was settled by the Romans, who held it till the early part of the 5th century. In their time Eboracum, or York, became a great city, being chosen as the seat or occasional residence of several of the emperors, and a centre of government. About 306, Constantius Chlorus died there, and Constantine the Great, his son, was made emperor. The Romans had many other towns in this district; among them were Cataractonium, Legiolum, Danum (Doncaster), Olicana, Cambodunum, Isurium (Aldborough), Deventio, Prætorium (Flamborough), Calcaria (Tadcaster), and Delgovitia. They also bestowed great attention upon the public roads, of which considerable remains exist at the present time, and which were the primary means of opening up and civilising this part of the country. The Watling Street, which extended along the whole length of England, from Rutupiæ, now Richborough, in Kent, to the wall of Severus, entered Yorkshire from Bawtry, on the borders of Nottingham, going by Doncaster, over Scausby and Pigburn Leas to Barnsdale, and so by Pontefract and Tadcaster to York, from which city it continued northward along the N.E. bank of the Ouse to Aldborough, where, being carried across the river, it went to Catterick Bridge and the Roman station Cataractonium, vestiges of which still remain, and thence over the Tees at Pierce Bridge into the county of Durham. Another military way led from Mancunium, now Manchester, to York, passing by Stainland, near Halifax, and Almondbury, near Huddersfield, to Dewsbury, where it crossed the river Calder, and proceeded along the present turnpike road to Wakefield, and thence, having joined the Watling Street, to Pontefract and York; from which city it proceeded to Malton, and then separated into two branches—one of which, now called Wade's Causeway, is in perfect condition, being 12 feet broad, paved with flint pebbles, and raised about 3 feet above the surface, led to Dunsley Bay, the Danus Sinus of Ptolemy, and the other branch to Scarborough and Filey. Several minor roads also traversed Yorkshire in different directions, but converged towards York; these were the vicinal way, from Castleford in the N., which went through Pontefract to Hatfield; another road went through Pontefract, Ackworth, Hemsworth, Barnsley, and Sheffield, to Chesterfield; and a third road from York passed over the Wolds to Bridlington Bay, with branches to Hunmanby, Patrington, Spurn Point, and Brough-on-the-Humber, where it crossed into Lincolnshire. After the departure of the Romans, in 426, Yorkshire formed part of the British kingdom of Deifyr, which, in 559, being reduced by Ella, a Saxon chieftain, changed its name to Deira, and afterwards formed part of the kingdom of Northumbria, which was overrun by the Danes in 867. The Villa Regia, the seat of the Northumbrian kings, is conjectured to have been at Osmondthorp, in the parish of Leeds. In 628 Christianity was introduced, under the auspices of Edwin, King of Northumbria, who laid the foundation of York Minster; but he, being slain in battle against Pendar, King of Mercia, the progress of the structure was stayed by his successor, the pagan Osric, until Oswald, King of Bernicia, having conquered the country, fixed his residence at York, and completed the church which Edwin had begun. During the reign of Alfred the Great, the greater part of Yorkshire was included in the Danelagh, but in the subsequent wars with that nation Athelstan gave them a decisive defeat at Brunanburgh. At the time of the Norman Conquest, the N. of England had been so ravaged by the Scots and Danes that the four northern counties are not included at all in the Domesday survey, and Yorkshire itself was but sparsely inhabited, owing to the devastation of the armies of Harold and his brother Tostig, and afterwards by the Normans under William the Conqueror, who, on the revolt of Earl Waltheof, marched northwards, burning and destroying as far as York. The county had been previously divided into three ridings, or, as they were originally called "trithings," and appears in early times to have comprised parts of Westmoreland and Cumberland, and the wolds of Lancashire. It was subsequently the scene of many events in the history of England, in connection with the Scottish wars, and in the wars of the Roses, when the battles of Wakefield, Ferrybridge, and Towton were fought, in which last 36,776 are said to have been slain. During the reign of Henry VII. an insurrection of the northern counties against a land tax took place, when the insurgents stormed the residence of the Earl of Northumberland at Topcliffe, near Thirsk, and put the earl to death for the part he was supposed to have taken in the imposition of the tax; but the insurrection was eventually suppressed by the Earl of Surrey. In the following reign Lord D'Arcy, Sir Thomas Percy, and other influential residents, incited the people to oppose by arms the changes involved in the suppression of monasteries and other religious establishments; and, in consequence of its supposed sacred object, their march was styled "The Pilgrimage of Grace." The castles of Pontefract, York, and Hull surrendered to the insurgents, but on approaching Doncaster they were met by an army under the Duke of Norfolk, when, negotiations having been entered into, the insurgents dispersed; but some of the leaders again endeavouring to revive the insurrection, were arrested and executed. Two partial insurrections of a similar character took place in 1537 and 1548, and in 1553, during Wyatt's rebellion, Scarborough Castle was surprised and taken by the insurgents. Some of the earliest movements in the civil war temp. Charles I. took place in this county, including the sieges of Hull, Wetherby, Tadcaster, Leeds, Bradford, York, Tickhill,

Sheffield, Knaresborough, Helmsley, Pontefract, Scarborough, Great Sandall, Bolton and Skipton castles, and the battles of Beverley, Selby, and Marston Moor. After the Restoration an insurrection was attempted in the West Riding by old parliamentary soldiers and others disaffected to the government. At the commencement of the present century its population was 859,133, and by the middle of the century it had more than doubled, being 1,718,266 in 1851, and 2,033,610 in 1861. The proportions are thus distributed over the four divisions:—

	Area in square miles.	Area in acres.	Population in 1801.	Population in 1851.	Population in 1861.
North Riding...	2,100	1,350,121	158,927	215,214	245,154
West Riding...	2,669	1,709,307	572,168	1,325,495	1,507,796
East Riding ...	1,201	768,419	111,192	220,983	240,227
City.....	4	2,720	16,846	36,303	40,433
Total.....	5,974	3,830,567	859,133	1,797,995	2,033,610

From this table it appears that the gross area of the county is more than one-tenth that of England and Wales, and more than one-ninth that of England alone; that the area of the West Riding exceeds that of any other English county, with the exception of Lincolnshire and Devonshire, while that of the North Riding is nearly equal to Norfolk, the fourth of the English counties in superficial extent. Indeed, the ridings are for many purposes shires by themselves, having their own lords-lieutenant, militia, members of parliament, coroners, registrars, and justices of the peace, and in the population returns, and other statistical documents, are treated as distinct counties; but there is only one sheriff for the whole of Yorkshire, which thus, for assize purposes, forms one shire. The ainsty of the city and shire of York was formerly a district independent of the ridings, but by virtue of an Act (5 and 6 William IV., cap. 76) it now constitutes a wapentake in the West Riding for civil purposes, and for county elections is included in the North Riding, though its ecclesiastical jurisdiction remains unchanged. The North Riding is divided into the wapentakes of Allertonshire, Birdforth, Bulmer, East Gilling, West Gilling, Hallikeld, East Hang, West Hang, Pickering Lythe, Ryedale, and the liberties of Langbaurgh and Whitby Strand; the West Riding into the wapentakes of Agbrigg, Barkstone Ash, Claro, Morley, Osgoldcross, Skyrack, Staincliff-with-Ewcross, Staincross, Strafforth-with-Tickhill, and the liberty of Ripon and ainsty of the city of York; the East Riding into the wapentakes of Buckrose, Dickering, Harthill, Holderness, Howdenshire, and Ouse and Derwent. These 29 wapentakes, which are similar to the hundreds of the other English counties, are farther divided into 623 parishes, and these again into townships and ecclesiastical districts. The most populous parishes are Leeds, Bradford, Halifax, Sheffield, Hull, Huddersfield, and Almondbury, and the largest townships are Dent, comprising 23,200 acres, and Sedbergh, 21,402 acres. There are about 45 market towns, many of them large and populous, including the cities of Ripon and York—the latter the capital and assize town; other important towns are Aldborough, Almondbury, Bainbridge, Barnsley, Barwick, Bawtry, Bedale, Beverley, North Bierley, Bingley, Boroughbridge, Bradford, Bridlington, Carlton, Dewsbury, Doncaster, Great Driffield, Easingwold, Goole, Guisborough, Halifax, Harrogate, Helmsley, Hemsworth, Howden, Huddersfield, Hull, Keighley, Kirkby Moorside, Knaresborough, Leeds, Leyburn, New Malton, Northallerton, Great Ouseburn, Pateley Bridge, Patrington, Penistone, Pickering, Pocklington, Pontefract, Great Preston, Reeth, Richmond, Rotherham, Saddleworth, Scarborough, Sedbergh, Selby, Settle, Sheffield, Skipton, Skirlaugh, Stokesley, Tadcaster, Thirsk, Thorne, Wakefield, Whitby, and Wortley. Besides these, there are about 2,500 villages and hamlets. Yorkshire is in the Northern Circuit and North Military district, and constitutes the dioceses of York and Ripon, both in the province of York. Previous to the passing of the Reform Act of 1832, Yorkshire returned 32 members to parliament, but the number was increased by that Act to 37—viz., 6 for the county, and 32 for 18 boroughs. Besides the legally recognised partition of the county into ridings and wapentakes, the names of several of the ancient feudal divisions are still retained for various purposes, although no such places appear marked on our maps. The more generally acknowledged are Cleveland, in the North Riding, lying between the estuary of the Tees and Whitby Haven, giving name to an archdeaconry; Craven, occupying the north-western portion of the West Riding, gives name to an archdeaconry and a deanery in the diocese of Ripon; Hallamshire, in the West Riding, is mentioned in Domesday survey as "Hallum, with its 16 hamlets," and is said by Leland to have comprised the parishes of Sheffield, Ecclesfield, Hunsworth, and the chapelry of Bradfield, to which may probably be added the parish of Attercliffe, all which manors are at the present day held by the Duke of Norfolk, and are within the jurisdiction of the bailiff of Hallamshire; Holderness, extending from Bridlington Bay to Spurn Head, E. of the river Hull, still forms a wapentake in the East Riding, and gives name to a seigniory, a liberty, and a manor; while Richmondshire, occupying the whole western portion of the North Riding, was erected into an earldom by William the Conqueror, and still gives name to an archdeaconry and a deanery in the diocese of Ripon. Within the county were formerly the royal forests of Galtries, Hardwick, Arkelgarthdale, Knaresborough, Pickering, Wharfedale, Swynden, Okeden, Harlow, Fullwith, Coverdale, and the chase of Hatfield, all which have been alienated from the crown and disafforested. The surface of the county generally rises rapidly from the shore towards the interior, to about the height of 400 feet, at which level is a considerable extent of fertile soil; more inland, the hills become loftier, till they reach the eastern moorlands, near the borders of which some of the heights command extensive prospects, particularly Roseberry Topping. Northward of these mountains is the vale of Cleveland, bounded on the N. by the Tees; but the most striking feature in the configuration of the surface is the great valley drained by the Ouse and its affluents, generally known as the Vale of York, and lying chiefly between the eastern and western moorlands. This valley stretches from near the Tees, in the northern part of the county to the estuary of the Humber, in the S., having a general direction from N. to S.S.E., and forming the northern slope of the most extensive valley in England —that of the Ouse and Trent. The high land on the eastern boundary of this valley presents a bold coast line to the German Ocean, and extends inland often to the distance of 20 or 30 miles, including Barnaby Moor, which has an elevation of 784 feet, Burleigh Moor, and the Guisborough hills. A small depression in the high moors opening to the sea at Whitby carries off the drainage of the small valley of the Esk, which runs between the Guisborough hills and the elevated Egton moors, which lie S. of it. From this point a wild and mountainous district, known as the East Moorlands, extends for about 30 miles in length from E. to W., and 15 miles in breadth from N. to S., being nearly parallel with the coast, occasionally interspersed with sheltered valleys. After passing Northallerton, the range of moorlands extends eastward, forming the North Yorkshire moors, which in some places rise to an elevation of above 1,000 feet, and are entirely devoid of trees. Among the most elevated points of this mountainous region are the trigonometrical stations of Bolton Head, 1,485 feet above the sea-level; Loosehoe Hill, 1,404 feet; Black Hambleton, 1,246 feet, and the Roseberry Topping. Lying a little to the W. is Ryedale, which takes its name from the river running through it, and gradually widens out into a spacious plain adjoining the East and West Marishes. The valley of the Derwent, in the same district, stretches from the sea-coast near Scarborough to the valley of the Ouse, separates the Eastern Moorlands from the Yorkshire Wolds, which latter form the continuation of the high lands on the E. side of the valley of the Ouse. The ascent of the Wolds, except on their eastern side, is generally steep, but they seldom rise to more than 600 feet, the highest point being Wilton Beacon, 809 feet above the sea-level; and they are not unfrequently broken by deep winding valleys. The line of cliffs which marks the eastern extremity of the Wolds commences in the N. at Speeton Cliff, and terminates in the S. near the Humber, including Flamborough Head, the most conspicuous point on the coast, and Bempton Cliff, rising to 436 feet above the sea. The plain lying between this range on the N. and W., the German Ocean on the E., and the Humber on the S., comprises the low-lying district of Holderness, the highest point of which is only 150 feet above the sea, and includes Hornsea Mere, the largest lake in the county, being 2 miles long by three-quarters of a mile broad. The western portion of this district, known by the local appellation of "The Cars," is still fenny, but the greater part of the land has been drained, under several Acts of parliament, besides which considerable tracts of marsh-land have been reclaimed from the Humber, and are now under cultivation. On the western side of the great valley of the Ouse rise the heights of the Pennine chain, which form the Western Moorlands, and are sometimes styled "the backbone of England," extending southward into the adjoining counties of Derby and Stafford. The highest point of this chain is at Cross Fell, 1,901 feet above the sea, near the north-western angle of the county, where it joins Westmoreland and Durham. From the great Pennine range spurs are thrown off in various directions—one range of hills forming the eastern side of the valley of the Eden, another the Cambrian mountains, and a third the district of Craven, including the summits of Bow Fell, with an elevation of 2,911 feet; Ingleborough, 2,361 feet; Penyghent, 2,270 feet; Wharnside, 2,384 feet; Great Wharnside, 2,263 feet, and Cam Fell, 2,245 feet. The principal valleys of this district are Nidderdale, Wharfedale, and Airedale, so named from the streams by which they are traversed, and with their richly-wooded slopes present a contrast to the bleak moors around them. From the above description of the valley of the Ouse a general idea is at once obtained of the course of that stream and its affluents, which drain at least seven-ninths of the whole area of the county. Of these the chief are the Ure, or Yore, and the Swale, which, uniting their waters a little below Boroughbridge, form the main stream of the Ouse, itself an affluent of the Humber. Flowing in a south-easterly direction, the Ouse receives on the left bank the Linton, with its tributaries, and on the right the Nidd, which gives name to Nidderdale, or Netherdale, where it disappears underground for about 2 miles, entering the earth by a wide and rocky cavern called Goydon-Pot-Hole, and again emerging, finally joins the Ouse at Nun Monkton. At York the Ouse receives the Foss—which has been made navigable to Sheriff Hutton Bridge, a distance of 12½ miles—on the left bank, near the S. side of the castle. Inclining a little to the westward, the Ouse forms the boundary between the Ainsty and the East Riding to near Cawood, where it receives on the right bank the stream of the Wharfe, which rises in the Western Moorlands, near the source of the Ribble, and flowing by Barden Tower and Bolton Abbey, becomes navigable at Tadcaster. For the remaining part of its course the Ouse constitutes the boundary between the East and West Ridings, receiving successively the waters of the Derwent on the left, and of the Aire with its tributaries on the right. This last-named river rises in Malham Tarn, a lake situated among the West Moorlands, and flowing for some distance through a subterranean passage, issues again at Malham Cove, and makes its way along the valley of Airedale to Leeds, where it becomes navigable, and receiving the Calder from the westward, and the Don from the S., finally joins the Ouse at Assleby Island, near Howden. From this point the Ouse pursues a tortuous course, passing by the modern port of Goole to its confluence with the Trent at Faxfleet, whence the united stream under the name of the Humber pursues an easterly course to the German Ocean. Of the other rivers belonging entirely to Yorkshire, but not tributary to the Ouse, the principal are the Hull and the Esk: the former rises at the eastern foot of the Wolds, in the East Riding, and being joined by the Old How Drain, becomes navigable to its confluence with the Humber at Kingston-upon-Hull, more familiarly known as Hull; while the Esk, rising near Roseberry Topping, in the eastern moorlands, and swollen by numerous small streams or mountain torrents, flows eastward through the narrow valley of Eskdale to the sea at Whitby. The rivers which flow partly within the county, but do not belong exclusively to Yorkshire, are the Torne, the Ribble, and the Tees, with its numerous branches; besides these are the Blythe, which rises in Yorkshire to the E. of Rotherham, but soon crosses the border into Lincolnshire, where it joins the Idle; the Tame, a tributary of the Mersey; the Wenning, which flows westward into Lancashire, where it joins the Lune; the Greta, also a tributary of the Lune; the Dee, which rises under Wharnside, and flowing through Dentdale enters Westmoreland, where it joins the Lune; and the Rother, the second river of that name in Yorkshire, which rises near the sources of the Eden, on the north-western boundary, and entering Westmoreland joins the Dee. The canals which intersect this county, contributing greatly to the progress of manufactures and industry, have been constructed at enormous cost, owing to the engineering works which have had to be undertaken in order to effect navigable communications between the eastern and western sides of the island across the central mountain chain, which stretches from N. to S. on the western side of the county, towards Lancashire. Nearly the whole of these works are confined to the West Riding, which abounds in large manufacturing towns, the canals in the East Riding being few and unimportant, and scarcely any within the North Riding. Of the difficulties to be surmounted in the construction of these works and the extent of the inland navigation some idea may be formed by inspecting the section given by Priestly of the artificial channel connecting the ports of Liverpool, on the Irish Sea, and Goole and Hull, on the German Ocean, by means of the river Mersey, the Duke of Bridgewater's and Rochdale canals, the Calder and Hebble and Aire and Calder navigations, and the rivers Ouse and Humber, altogether a distance of 258½ miles. Other lines of water communication connecting the two oceans are formed by the more circuitous route of the Leeds and Liverpool canal, with the Aire and Calder navigation, and by the more direct cut of the Ashton-under-Lyne and Huddersfield canals, which communicate with the Calder and Hebble navigation through Sir James Ramsden's canal. Numerous other connecting canals traverse the West Riding, which is likewise intersected by a network of railways, chiefly pertaining to the systems of the Great Northern, North-Eastern, London and North-Western, Midland, Lancashire and Yorkshire, and North British, by all of which lines the city of York may be approached, as may also Hull, in the East Riding, with the addition of the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire, and Hull and Hornsea lines. The climate of this county naturally varies greatly in its different portions, according to the elevation, exposure, and underlying strata which characterise each division, and even in the same parish some differences may be observed; but some general conclusions may be drawn applying with tolerable accuracy to the three ridings. In the sheltered valleys, with a southerly or south-westerly aspect, the climate is mild and genial, and the seasons early, while on the uplands the air is cold and bracing, and the atmosphere frequently disturbed by tempests, and in the marshy level districts mists are frequent; but the county is not unhealthy. The West Riding, or West Yorkshire, as it is now frequently designated, is by far the largest and most important of the three divisions, occupying the inland portion of the county, and chiefly celebrated for its manufactures, 26 per cent. of the population living by commerce, manufactures, and the arts, and only 4½ per cent. by agriculture. In this division are situated the manufacturing towns of Leeds, Sheffield, Bradford, Huddersfield, Halifax, Wakefield, Rotherham, Keighley, Ripon, Barnsley, Doncaster, Bingley, and Dewsbury, together containing above half a million of inhabitants. The manufactures are chiefly woollen, cotton, and silk, hardware, cutlery, arms, machinery, and an almost indescribable variety of useful articles; but a fuller account of these will be found under the several headings of the places named above, each of which possesses its peculiar industries. The West Riding is also rich in coals and ironstone, which are extensively worked, chiefly in the neighbourhood of Leeds, Sheffield, Bradford—where the seams are thickest—Wakefield, and Barnsley; there are likewise mines of copper and lead, and quarries of limestone, freestone, and grindstone. The great Yorkshire coalfield lies chiefly to the W. of the Vale of York, between the Aire and Don, being comprised within a circle which extends across the Derbyshire border, and may be defined as described by a line drawn through Todwick, Conisbrough, Elmsall, Pomfret, Aberford, Horsforth, Wilsden, Halifax, where the coal strata are thinnest, and Huddersfield, where the circle again crosses the Derbyshire border. This circle encloses about 45 miles by 20, consisting of carboniferous strata 4,000 feet thick, but only about 40 feet of coal, in 20 consecutive layers or beds, from 1½ to 10 feet each in thickness, the top seams being usually of inferior quality, the next good for furnaces, and the lower, which are at an average of 200 feet below the surface, of excellent quality, interlaid with beds of ironstone; the other intervening strata chiefly consist of clay, shales, and sandstone. In the vale of York the strata chiefly belong to the New and Lower Red sandstone formations, with magnesian limestone in places—which last is extensively quarried for burning into lime. Within this Vulcanian district all kinds of manufactures most flourish. To the N. and W. of the carboniferous formation, gritstone prevails as far down as Sheffield, and in the north-western portion of the West Riding, comprising the mountainous district of Craven, carboniferous limestone and slaty rocks prevail. For registration and statistical purposes, the West Riding is shared into 29 registration districts, but as many townships are still under the Gilbertine, or local Act, and not under Poor-law unions. The boundaries of these divisions do not always correspond. The North Riding, which comprises the maritime portion of the county, between the rivers Derwent and Tees, has neither such large nor populous townships and parishes as the West Riding, but is better divided than that district. Its chief towns are Scarborough and Whitby, both parliamentary boroughs, the inhabitants of which are chiefly engaged in ship-building, ship-owning, the coal trade, and various branches of nautical enterprise. Richmond and Malton are likewise parliamentary boroughs, each returning two members to parliament, and Northallerton and Thirsk one each—the former being also a sessions town. There are also the market towns of Easingwold, Helmsley, Leyburn, Stokesley, Bedale, Guisborough, Pickering, Reeth, Askrigg, Hawes, Kirby Moorside, Masham, Middleham, and Yarm, and the port of Middlesborough. About 14 per cent. of the inhabitants of this district live by agriculture, and only 12 per cent. by commerce and manufactures, contrasting remarkably with the West Riding. Of the surface nearly one half is uncultivated, and about a quarter unimprovable moorland. Along the coast are Filey Head, a mass of coral ragstone; Scarborough port and castle; Ravenhill camp, where the Danes landed under Hubba in 876; the Peak Alum works, situated on the Alum slate rocks, which in some places attain an elevation of 900 feet above the sea; Robin Hood Bay, named by the Romans Dunum Sinus, with its lias cliffs abounding in remains of saurians and other fossils; Whitby port; Stoupe Brow Cliff; Mulgrave Castle; Runswick Bay; Easington heights; Redcar and Scars reefs, composed of Red sandstone; the ports of Cleveland and Middlesborough, at the entrance to the Tees. The East Riding is about the size of an average shire, being of the extent of 1,201 square miles, or 768,419 acres. It is bounded on the S. by the firth of the Humber and the shire of Lincoln, on the N.E. by the shore of the North Sea, on the N. by the North Riding, and on the W. by the West Riding, and is in circuit about 170 miles, of which 80 are coast-line, for the most part low and sandy. The chief feature, as influencing the geographical character of the district, is the Humber, with the Ouse and its branches falling in on the W. On the Humber is the great town and port of Hull, or Kingston-upon-Hull, anciently called Abus, one of the leading commercial towns in England, with safe anchorage in 5 to 6 fathoms water, leading up to Goole port. The other considerable towns are Beverley, a sessions and market town, Sculcoates, Bridlington, Great Driffield, Howden, Pocklington, Hedon, Patrington, South Cave, and Market Weighton, all market towns. Much of the land is in cultivable wolds or rich lowlands, watered by the Hull river, the feeders of the Ouse, and the brooks falling into the Humber. The sea-shore and the shore of the Humber facilitate navigation, and the Ouse and Hull are navigable and canalised. About 13 per cent. of the people live by commerce, navigation, and manufactures, and 12 per cent. by agriculture. The progress of the population has been considerable, chiefly owing to the great increase of manufactures in the West Riding, and thereby of the export and import trade through Hull, which is a shire of itself, having its own assizes and separate jurisdiction. Even in the districts of the East Riding more purely agricultural, the population has vastly increased owing to the improvements in husbandry, which have been carried out on a great scale during the present century. Warrens have been converted into good sheep lands, marshes been drained, lands enclosed, and a little timber planted on the Wolds, which are now well cultivated. The principal artificial manures made use of are chalk, ground boras, wreck or sea-weed, and shell-marl, which last is obtained in Holderness and near Market Weighton, where bones of the elephant, rhinoceros, bison, and other extinct quadrupeds have been found. The farms in Yorkshire are generally large, averaging from £200 to £1,500 rental, and are generally held by yearly tenure. The Keyingham and Hedon levels drain into the Humber, and the Lambwith, Holderness, Barnston, and Beverley levels into the Hull. The county has long been noted for the excellence of its breed of horses, especially coach and saddle-horses, which are reared in great numbers in the North and East Ridings, round Cleveland Bay, and are sold at the fairs of Beverley, Malton, York, and Howden, the capital of this district, where the largest horse-fair in England is held. The West Riding is famous for the Craven breed of long-horned cattle, and Holderness for its short-horned, or Teeswater breed. The Penistone breed of sheep is supposed to be indigenous, but a cross between the Leicester and South Down are now generally preferred on the Wolds. In the East Riding, where the surface is not overlaid by post-tertiary deposits, the chalk crops up in hard chalky swelling wolds, extending over a space of 30 miles by 20, or about 400,000 acres, principally laid out in sheep-walks. Beyond the chalk, which is never found N. of Hunmanby, a thin border of greensand, coral rag, and lias extends, often rising into hills of considerable elevation; and thence all the rest of the East Riding, as far as the Ouse, forms part of the vale of York, previously described. Formerly the whole of Yorkshire, with the exception of the north-western portion of the North Riding, which belonged to the diocese of Chester, was in the diocese of York, but since the formation of the bishopric of Ripon, by an Order of Council dated October 5, 1836, the county is divided between the dioceses of York and Ripon in the following proportions—the archdeaconry of York comprising the West Riding, the archdeaconry of the East Riding, and the archdeaconry of Cleveland, constitute the diocese of York, and are under the immediate charge of the archbishop of the province of York, who is also primate of England; while the archdeaconries of Craven and Richmond belong to the diocese of Ripon. Besides the cathedral at York, Yorkshire contains numerous remains of abbeys and other monastic edifices, as Kirkstall, Selby, Roche, Fountains, Byland, Rievaulx, and Whitby abbeys, Bolton and Knaresborough priories, also the ancient castles of Conisbrough, Cawood, Harewood, Knaresborough, Pontefract, Skipton, Richmond, Skelton, and Clifford's Tower, at York.

YORK WEST, a hmlt. in the par. of Ash, co. Kent, 8 miles N.E. of Sevenoaks.

YORTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Broughton, co. Salop, 7 miles N. of Shrewsbury. It is a station on the Crewe, Whitchurch, and Shrewsbury branch of the London and North-Western railway.

YOUGHAL, a parliamentary borough, seaport, and market town in the barony of Imokilly, co. Cork, and province of Munster, Ireland, 46 miles S.W. from Waterford, and 36 E. from Cork, with which latter it is connected by the Cork and Youghal direct railway. It is situated at the mouth of the river Blackwater. The harbour is safe, and the quays are accessible to vessels of 500 tons. On the S. side of the town is a lighthouse, and it is intended to build a fort to command the harbour. The town was early a place of importance, and received its charter of incorporation from King John in 1209. It was strongly fortified, and sustained many sieges. The inhabitants were loyal to England, and in 1579 defended the town against the Earl of Desmond, who was proclaimed a traitor. Cromwell made it his headquarters in 1649, but on the Restoration it at once proclaimed Charles II. Sir Walter Raleigh was elected mayor of this town in 1588 on his return from America, and here first introduced potatoes into Ireland. The town consists of one central thoroughfare about a mile in length divided into two parts by a building called the clock-gate, containing the town clock and bell, surmounted by a cupola. The houses occupy the acclivity of a hill on the W. side of the estuary of the Blackwater. The town contained in 1851 7,410, and in 1861 6,514 inhabitants. *Of the population in 1861, 739 were members of the Established Church, 5,648 were Roman Catholic, 32 Presbyterians, and 62 Methodists. The parish church of St. Mary formerly belonged to a college founded by one of the Earls of Desmond in 1464. There is also a chapel-of-ease at the S. end of the town. There is a Roman Catholic chapel, a convent of nuns of the Presentation order, also chapels for Independents, Methodists, and Friends. There are National, parochial, endowed, and conventual schools, and almshouses, an infirmary, fever hospital, dispensary, barracks, and prison. The care of the town is vested in 21 commissioners. The streets are paved, and lighted with gas. The borough returns one member to parliament. Market days are Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs are held on 5th May, 18th October, and the first Monday in each month.

YOUGHALARRA, a par. in the bar. of Owney and Arra, co. Tipperary, Ireland, 6 miles N.W. of Nenagh. The par. is situated on a bay of the same name in Lough Derg, where the rivers Youghalarra and Newtown unite their streams. Near the village are the remains of Monroe Tower. The principal residence is Youghalarra House, the seat of the Smithwick family. There are slate and stone quarries. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Killaloe, Kilfenora, Clonfert, and Kilmacduagh, val. £330, in the patron. of the bishop. There are two churches of the Establishment within the parish, the more ancient situated near a holy well, known as St. Coulan's. There are several Roman Catholic chapels and schools. Fairs are held on the 6th March, 27th June, 30th September, and 13th December.

YOULGRAVE, a par. partly in the hund. of Wirksworth, and partly in that of High Peak, co. Derby, 3½ miles S.W. of Bakewell, and 3 from Rowsley railway station. The par., which comprises above 12,000 acres, is watered by a branch of the river Wye, and includes the chplries. of Stanton, Elton, and Winster, the last also a market town, with the tnshps. of Birchover, Gratton, and Middleton, and the hmlts. of Smerril, Conksbury, Hartlemoor, Alport, and Greenfield. Some of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton mills, and others in the stone quarries and lead mines, which latter, though formerly more productive than at present, are still in active operation. The population in 1861 was 3,738. In the township of Middleton is a Druidical circle, known as Arborlowes Ring, surrounded by numerous barrows. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £200. The parish church, dedicated to All Saints, contains a font supposed to be of the 11th century, and several old monuments. There are chapels-of-ease at Elton, Stanton, and Winster, and chapels for Wesleyans and other Protestant Dissenters in various parts of the parish. There is a free school endowed with £25 per annum, and National and denominational schools. The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor of Youlgrave, and W. Pole Thornhill, Esq., of that of Elton.

YOULTHORPE, a tnshp. in the par. of Bishop-Wilton, East Riding co. York, 5 miles N.W. of Pocklington. It includes the hmlt. of Gowthorpe.

YOULTON, a tnshp. in the par. of Alne, North Riding co. York, 6 miles S.W. of Easingwold, on the Ouseburn, a branch of the river Ouse.

YOUNSMERE, a hund. in the rape of Lewes, co. Sussex, containing the pars. of Falmer, Ovingdean, and Rottingdean, comprising 8,010 acres.

YOXALL, a par. in the N. div. of Offlow hund., co. Stafford, 7 miles N.E. of Lichfield, and 5 N.E. of the Armitage railway station. The village is situated on the road from Buxton to Bath, and is watered by the Swerborn brook, falling into the Trent about a mile eastward. The par., part of which has been enclosed from Needwood Forest, contains the hmlts. of Hadley End, Hoarcross, Longcroft, Morrey, Olive Green, Woodmill, Wood Lane, and Woodhouses. The principal seats in the neighbourhood are Hoarcross Hall, Yoxall Lodge in the vale of Linbrook, and Longcroft Hall. There is a savings-bank in the village, and the manufactures of tape and nails are carried on. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Lichfield, val. £508, in the patron. of the lord chancellor. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. The Roman Catholics have a chapel at Wood Lane, with school attached. There are also free and National schools. The charities produce about £180 per annum, including the school endowment and a bequest of £50 for six clergymen's widows. Lord Leigh is lord of the manor.

YOXFORD, a par. in the hund. of Blything, co. Suffolk, 6 miles S. of Halesworth, 3 N.E. of Saxmundham, and 1 mile from the Yoxford railway station on the East Suffolk section of the Great Eastern line. The village is situated in a spot frequently called the garden of Suffolk, watered by the Badingham and Yox streams, and traversed by the old road from Ipswich to Lowestoft and Yarmouth. In the immediate vicinity are Cockfield Hall, the mansion of Sir John Blois, Bart.; Grove House, of Lord Manners; the Rookery, &c. The East Suffolk constabulary have their head-quarters here, and petty sessions are held fortnightly on Wednesday. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Norwich, val. £230. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was enlarged in 1837, and contains five brasses, one of J. Norwich, in armour, bearing date 1400, another of J. Tendryng and children in shrouds dated 1485, and many monuments. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. There are National schools and a mechanics' institute. The charities produce about £10 per annum.

YSCEIFIOG, a par. in the hund. of Rhuddlan, co. Flint, 3 miles S.W. of Holywell, comprising the tnshps. and hmlts. of Bodingen, Garneddwen, Gelliloved, Pryse, Trefraeth, and Tre-Llan. The surface is partly moorland and sheep-walks. Lead is found. In 1816 a gold torque was found here, which is now preserved at Eaton Hall. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £900, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St Mary the Virgin. The charities produce about £10 per annum.

YSCIR-VAWR and YSCIR-VECHAN, hmlts. in the par. of Merthyr-Cynog, co. Brecon, 10 miles N.W. of Brecknock. They are situated among the mountains in the vale of the Yscir stream, which joins the Usk at Aberyscir.

YSCLYDACH, a hmlt. and chplry. in the par. of Llywell, hund. of Devynnock, co. Brecon, 9 miles W. of Brecknock. It contains Pentre-felin, situated among the hills on the Roman road Via Julia Montana, near the river Usk.

YSGNBOR-FAWR, a hmlt. in the par. of Llandefeilog, co. Carmarthen, 4 miles N. of Kidwelly.

YSGWYDDGWYN, a hmlt. in the par. of Gelligaer, co. Glamorgan, 6 miles N. of Caerphilly, and 8 S.E. of Merthyr Tydfil. It is situated in a mining district among the hills at the head waters of the rivers Rumney and Clydach. The population has nearly quadrupled in the last ten years, owing to the collieries and mines.

YSGWYN, a hmlt. in the par. of Llan-Gathan, co. Carmarthen, 3 miles W. of Llandilo-Fawr.

YSPYTTY CYNFYN, a par. in co. Cardigan, 10 miles S.E. of Aberystwith. The village is situated on the Rhayader road, near the confluence of the rivers Castel and Rheidol, which unite in a rocky gorge forming a cataract. About half a mile from the village, in a defile, is "Parson's Bridge." There are traces of a hospitium, or sanctuary for travellers, from which the village takes the prefix to its name, and in the churchyard are four blocks of stone which once formed part of a Druid circle. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £105, in the patron. of the landowners.

YSPYTTY EVAN, a par. partly in the hund. of Nant Conway, co. Carnarvon, and partly in that of Isaled, co. Denbigh, 8 miles S.E. of Llanwrst, 7 from Pont-ar-Afon-Garn, and 2 from Pentrevollas. It is situated near the headwaters of the river Conway, which issues from Llyn Conway, a large sheet of water surrounded by hills. The par. includes the tnshps. of Eidda, Tîr Evan, and Trebrys, and takes its name from an hospitium, or sanctuary for travellers, founded for the Knights Templars in 1159 by Ivan-ap-Rhys. The village subsequently became the head-quarters of bands of robbers who devastated the district, until checked by Meredydd-ap-Evan. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of St. Asaph, val. £125. The church, originally the chapel of the preceptory, has been rebuilt, and contains three monumental effigies commemorating Rhys-Fawr-ap-Meredydd, Henry VII.'s standard-bearer at the battle of Bosworth, his son and wife. The charities produce about £9 per annum. Fairs are held on 17th March, 21st May, 3rd July, 27th September, 2nd October, and 4th December.

YSPYTTY-YSTRAD-MEIRIC, a par. in the upper div. of Ilar hund., co. Cardigan, 6 miles N.E. of Tregaron. It is situated in the hills, about 2 miles from the source of the river Teifi, which emerges from Llyn Teifi, a mountain lake, while tributary streams issue from three smaller lakes, Llyn-hîr, Llyn-y-Gorlan, and Llyn Egnant. A cell formerly existed here belonging to the Abbey of Strata Florida, from which circumstance the village derives its name, Yspytty Ystrad Meiric, signifying "the third hospitium" established in this district, the others being Yspytty Cynfyn and Yspytty Ystwyth. There are also traces of a castle built by Gilbert de Clare, which was frequently taken and retaken by the English and Welsh in the 12th century, and was finally demolished by Mallgwyn in 1207, also a hill fort and cairn. The living is a cur. united with Yspytty-Ystwyth. The charities produce about £240, including the Lledrod charity, and the endowment of the grammar school, or Welsh college founded by Edward Richards in 1757, which has a library attached and an exhibition to St. John's College, Cambridge. A fair is held on 2nd July.

YSPYTTY-YSTWYTH, a par. and vil. in the upper div. of Ilar hund., co. Cardigan, 7 miles N.E. of Tregaron. The village is situated in the upper part of the vale of the Ystwyth, and had anciently a hospitium, as its name implies. The surface is hilly and frequently boggy near the streams. The population is increasing, owing to the development of the mining industry in the valley of the Ystwyth, where are situated the lead mines of Cwm Ystwyth, one of the earliest worked in Cardiganshire. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. with that of Yspytty-Ystrad Meiric annexed, £90. The church is dedicated to St. John the Baptist. Fairs are held on the Thursday in Whitsun week, the 2nd and 26th of August.

YSTRAD, a hmlt. and chplry. in the par. of Llandingat, hunds. of Perfedd and Cayo, co. Carmarthen, 2 miles from Llandovery, near the rivers Bren and Towy.

YSTRAD, a hmlt. in the par. of Llanegwad, co. Carmarthen, 7 miles E. of Carmarthen.

YSTRAD, a hmlt. in the par. of St. Ishmael, co. Carmarthen, 3 miles W. of Kidwelly.

YSTRAD, a tnshp. in the par. of Llan-ddewi-brefi, hund. of Penarth, co. Cardigan, 4 miles S.W. of Tregaron. It is situated near the Roman way Sarn Helen, and is in conjunction with Garth to form a township.

YSTRAD, a tnshp. in the par. of Caron-ys-Clawdd, hund. of Penarth, co. Cardigan, 3 miles from Tregaron. It is situated near the river Teifi, and the Sarn Helen way, and includes the hmlt. of Argoed.

YSTRAD, a hmlt. in the par. of Llanfihangel-Ystrad, co. Cardigan, 7 miles E. of Aberaeron. Here are situated the Cribyn Clottas dyke or trench, and Maes Mynach stone.

YSTRAD-GUNLAIS, a par. in the hund. of Devynnock, co. Brecon, 8 miles N. of Neath, and 14 from Swansea. It is situated near the head of the Swansea canal and the river Tawe, here joined by the little river Llech. It is divided into Upper and Lower, and contains the chplry. of Capel Coelbren and the hmlts. of Cribarth, Ellen, Garth, Gurnos, Palleg, and Pentrose, with the "Lamb and Flag Inn" at the head of the Swansea canal. At Scwd Hen Rhyd, in the chplry. of Capel Coelbren, the Llech tumbles over the rock at a height of 100 feet, allowing the traveller to pass dryshod under the fall. The coal measures, which in the S. and E. divisions of the coal-fields are bituminous, are here anthracite. The population has of late years increased, owing to the working of the beds of ironstone, anthracite coal, and lime, with which this district abounds. The living is a rect. in the dioc. of St. David's, val. £400. The parish church, dedicated to St. Mary, has several inscribed stones, supposed to be of Roman origin, built into the walls, probably brought from the ancient Nidum, now Neath. There is besides a chapel-of-ease at Capel Coelbren. In this parish are traces of a hermitage or church, called "Cradoc's Church," and several hill forts, cairns, and other antiquities, including erect fossil coal trees of the class Sigillaria, discovered by Sir W. Logan in the bed of the river.

YSTRAD-GWYMR, a tnshp. in the par. of Talyllyn, co. Merioneth, 6 miles N.W. of Machynlleth.

YSTRAD-OWEN, a par. in the hund. of Cowbridge, co. Glamorgan, 2 miles N.E. of Cowbridge. It is a station on the Taff Vale railway. The village is said to have been once the seat of Prince Owen-ap-Gllin, from which circumstance it derives its name. The principal seats are Ashall, Hênsol, and Talyfaen Castle. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £50, in the patron. of the bishop. The church is dedicated to St. Owain. The charities produce about £12 per annum.

YSTRADVELLTEY, a par. in the hund. of Devynnock, co. Brecon, 15 miles S.W. of Brecknock. The parish, which is divided into Upper and Lower, contains Pont-neath-Vaughan, and is situated on the Roman way Via Julia Montana, which is joined about 3 miles from the village by the Sarn Helen way, leading from the Vale of Neath to the Gaer, near Brecon. The Mellte, Hepste, and Purthen falls are visited from this place, and near the church a branch of the river Mellte disappears and flows underground as far as Porth-yr-Ogof, where the river again emerges through a cavern lined with calcareous spar, about 40 feet high, 20 wide, and 1,800 in length. The living is a cur. united with that of Devynnock. The charities produce about £50 per annum.

YSTRAD-Y-FODWG. a par in the hund. of Miskin, co. Glamorgan, 10 miles S.W. of Merthyr Tydfil. It is situated near the source of the Rontha, a branch of the river Taff, and includes the ecclesiastical district and village of Clydach, and the hmlts. of Home, Middle, and Rhigos. The village occupies a secluded spot in a mountain valley, which forms part of the great coal basin flanked on either side by ranges of hills rising to an elevation of 1,859 feet, and forming an amphitheatre of mountain. In the vale are several farms, chiefly the property of the Marquess of Bute, who owns almost the whole valley. The mountain streams here form several falls as they rush down to the Taff. The inhabitants are principally employed in the Dinas coal mines. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Llandaff, val. £90, in the patron. of the Vicar of Llantrisant. The church is dedicated to St. Tyvodwg. There are several Dissenting chapels.

YSTRADYNOD, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanidloes, co. Montgomery, 2 miles from Llanidloes.

YSTWYTH, a river of co. Cardigan, rises on the Montgomeryshire border under Plinlimmon, and falls into the sea at Aberystwyth.

YSTYMCOLWYN, a tnshp. in the par. of Meifod, co. Montgomery, 3 miles S.E. of Llanfyllin.

YSTYMGYNNON, a tnshp. in the par. of Llanfechan, co. Montgomery, 3 miles E. of Llanfyllin.

YSTYNGWILLY, a hmlt. in the par. of Abergwylly, hund. of Elvet, co. Carmarthen, 2 miles N.E. of Carmarthen, at the confluence of the Gwilly and Towey.

Z.

ZEAL MONACHORUM, a par. and tnshp. in the hund. of North Tawton, co. Devon, 15 miles N.W. of Exeter, 8 N.W. of Crediton, and 2 S.W. of the Morchard Road station of the North Devon railway. The village is situated on the river Yeo. The soil in the southern part is a red fertile loam, and in the northern clay upon a subsoil of rock. Sandstone is quarried. The living is a rect.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £419, and 53 acres of glebe. The church is dedicated to St. Peter. There is a mixed National school. The charities produce about £16 per annum. J. H. Ley, Esq., is lord of the manor.

ZEAL, SOUTH, a hmlt. in the par. of South Tawton, hund. of Wonford, co. Devon, three quarters of a mile S. of South Tawton, 4 miles S.E. of Oakhampton, and 10 S.W. of the Copplestone station of the North Devon railway. It was once a borough and market town. The old chapel is now used as a school house.

ZEALS, a tythg. and ecclesiastical district in the par. of Mere, co. Wilts, 1½ mile S.W. of Mere, 7 W. of Hindon, and 4 from Gillingham railway station. The village is built round a green, locally situated on the borders of the three counties of Wilts, Dorset, and Somerset, and has recently been constituted a separate ecclesiastical district. The principal residence is Zeals House, the ancient seat of the Grove family, one of whom, then owner of the mansion, was executed in 1655 for having joined with Penruddock in an attempt to restore Charles II. The living is a perpet. cur. in the dioc. of Salisbury, val. £80, in the patron. of the Vicar of Mere. The church is dedicated to St. Martin.

ZENNOR, a par. in the W. div. of Penwith hund., co. Cornwall, 6 miles N.E. of Penzance, and 5 S.W. of St. Ives, on the cliffs near the western extremity of the Bristol Channel, by which it is bounded on the N. The coast line is in some parts alternated with small bays, one of which is named Porth Zennon Cove, and with projecting headlands, the most conspicuous being Trereen Dinas, or Gurnard's Head. The surface is varied, but nearly three-fourths are waste land, and the situation bleak. The soil is a mixture of good earth and killas upon substrata of killas, granite, slaty felspar, and greenstone, intersected with veins of tin. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the neighbouring tin mines and stone quarries, large quantities of the latter being sent to Penzance for shipment. The living is a vic.* in the dioc. of Exeter, val. £180, in the patron. of the bishop. The church, dedicated to St. Sennar, contains several monuments and an old font. There are National schools, and a Sunday-school is held at the church. The Wesleyans have three chapels, and the Bible Christians one. At Kerrow was formerly a chapel-of-ease, now in ruins, and at Foage is a stone barrow with a kistvaen, about a furlong from which is an ancient cromlech; in other parts of the parish are remains of a Druidical circle and some barrows. The Earl of Sandwich is lord of the manor.

ZETHOLM. See YETHOLM, co. Roxburgh.

ZETLAND ISLES. See SHETLAND ISLES, Scotland.

ZOUCH MILL, a hmlt. in the par. of Sutton Bonnington St. Ann, S. div. of Rushcliff hund., co. Notts, 5 miles N.W. of Loughborough, and 1 mile S. of Kegworth railway station. It is situated near the river Soar, and at the Kirk Hill close by are traces of a Roman camp.

APPENDIX.

I.—Tabular View of the United Kingdom—England and Wales, Scotland, Ireland.

II.—Summary of the Poor-Law Returns for 1866-7, giving the Area, Inhabited Houses, Population, Rateable Value for 1867, Poor Rates, Amount expended in Relief to the Poor, and Total Expenditure.

III.—Digest of the Census Returns of Great Britain and Ireland, 1861.

The following Appendix comprises a digest of the information contained in the Census Returns for 1861, the Poor-Law Reports, and other Government Blue Books, so tabulated as to supply at one glance a statistical survey of the United Kingdom, and at the same time so arranged as to furnish a ready means of ascertaining the minute particulars of local interest attaching to each separate city, borough, town, village, parish, ecclesiastical district, and hamlet. To achieve this result, no little amount of labour was requisite; for although the materials were all supplied by the Government Returns, the means of reference were often difficult, and the information scattered through many volumes. Even to those who have the whole of the Government Reports on their shelves, it is hoped that these tables will prove of service; for they will here find a list of all places in the United Kingdom arranged alphabetically, with their several descriptions, as city, borough, town, parish, &c., the days on which markets are held, the county and union in which situated, with the population and the extent or area in statute acres, with the exception of a few parishes in Scotland, for which the Ordnance Survey is not yet completed. In the case of Ecclesiastical Districts, the area is not stated in the Census Returns, their bounds being often undefined, so that the population only can be given. In the lists of Poor-Law Unions, the rateable value of property is given from the new valuation Returns so far as revised up to April, 1867. At the close of each English entry, a number is affixed indicating the Registration District and Union within which such place is situated, and by which it may be found in the Population Returns and Poor-Law Reports; but the express object of inserting these numbers here is to refer the inquirer at once to the place in the preceding tables of Poor-Law Unions where he will find the Union within which such place is situated, with the rateable value of property in 1867, the number of inhabited houses in 1861, the total amount of poor rate levied in 1866, the proportion expended in relief to the poor, in-maintenance and out-relief, and the total amount expended, including county rate, borough and police rates, &c., compared with the area and population. No numbers have been affixed to the Scotch and Irish places, because the former are grouped, not under unions, but counties, and in Ireland the unions are arranged alphabetically under provinces and counties.

* There are no precise returns of the area of the Isle of Man and parts of Scotland, the Ordnance Survey not being yet complete, so that these figures must be received as an approximation only.

† The number of emigrants from the United Kingdom in the following years, since the above return, was—

1862	121,214
1863	223,753
1864	208,900
1865	209,801
1866	204,882

‡ In computing the per-centage of increase between 1831 and 1841, the military, included for the first time in the population given for the latter year, are left out of the account. So also, in computing the rate of increase between 1841 and 1851, the seamen and others on board vessels in the ports, returned with the general population in 1851 for the first time, are excluded.

§ Sta. denotes that the population was nearly stationary; the minus sign (—) before the rate denotes that the population, instead of increasing, decreased at the stated rate.

‖ The alterations made by the Reform Act of 1867 are indicated by the signs (+) plus and (—) minus, the former signifying that the number following it is to be added to the existing number of members, and the latter that such number is to be subtracted, to give the number of members as fixed by the Reform Act of 1867.

¶ Previous to the passing of the Reform Act of 1867 only four members were returned for the Universities, viz., two for Oxford and two for Cambridge, but one is in future to be returned for the University of London, and one for the Scotch Universities.

 Cities and towns in England and Wales which are counties of themselves:—Berwick-upon-Tweed, Bristol, Canterbury, Carmarthen, Chester, Exeter, Gloucester, Haverfordwest, Kingston-upon-Hull, Lichfield, Lincoln, London, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Norwich, Nottingham, Poole, Southampton, Worcester, and York. The county of the city of Coventry was annexed to Warwickshire by the Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 110, which passed 12th August, 1842.

†† Of this number 115,353 were foreigners, and 154,439 were undistinguished; but if we assume that the numbers whose nationality was not ascertained were distributed proportionately over the rest, the above summary will be obtained.
